CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 11.

IN Chicago where this is written the sun is shining brightly, on Wabash avenue, on the lake, and all the surrounding country. Gigantic buildings reach skywards, north of the Chicago River on Michigan avenue, where this writer advised friends to buy real estate a few years ago.

The great opera house will soon be built, thanks largely to Samuel Insull.

This is a great city, destined perhaps to be the world's greatest air port, and the world's greatest city.

Los Angeles, Seattle and a hundred other places will disagree with that suggestion.

THIS is Lincoln's birthday. Yesterday was Edison's birthday. One hundred and nineteen years ago, a tall, thin woman, probably not able to read or write, the sort that would be kept out of the United States by our immigration laws now, was taking care of a long boy baby, just born.

That was a "lucky" baby for the United States, named Abraham Lincoln, he kept this country united, which pleases the South today as well as the North.

THIRTY-EIGHT years after Lincoln was born, along came Thomas A. Edison, another fortunate arrival for this country. He supplied electric light and many other things. He was 81 yesterday. May he see 101.

FATHERS and mothers, and because they can't give their sons "all the advantages" will please notice that the two sons, Edison and Lincoln, had no advantages. They didn't get to college, no fortune was left them. They acquired information, had little education. But they did have the chance that every American boy has, and all that anybody needs, if intelligent and willing to work.

THE appearance of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., before the Senate oil committee, is in one respect different from some other appearances. The committee and the public believe what Mr. Rockefeller says. Mr. Rockefeller testified that he owns 402,280 shares of Standard Oil of Indiana, the Rockefeller foundation, its income devoted to public service, owns 460,760 shares, the University of Chicago 50,000 shares, Mr. Rockefeller's two sisters, 500,000 shares held in trust.

MR. ROCKEFELLER knows nothing about the particular deal alleged to have supplied money to bribe a member of the United States cabinet.

A fact interesting to Wall Street is that the Rockefeller family apparently think pretty well of Standard Oil of Indiana.

SENATOR WHEELER, sincerely, of course, assails what he calls "Coolidge's private war in Nicaragua." That country is described by Senator Wheeler as a Wall Street protectorate."

SOME in Wall Street, American citizens, having investments in Nicaragua, doubtless like to have those investments protected. The country ought to protect them, as the British empire and other nations protect rights of their citizens.

THE important thing in Nicaragua is the fact that we have with that country a treaty enabling us to build a much needed sea level canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

That canal would supplement the work of the Panama Canal, already crowded. Above all, it would give us a canal free from great locks, not subject as the Panama Canal is, easy to destruction from the air.

THAT sea-level Nicaragua Canal for the protection of this country, and the protection of the rights of American citizens, are considerably more important than the imaginary right of the bandit Sandino to shoot American Marines.

A TIME to weep, and a time to rejoice, a time to buy and a time to sell. John Hertz, father of Yellow Cab, who knows the time to buy and sell, sold Yellow Truck and Coach Manufacturing Company to General Motors.

Now the company's preferred stock dividend is passed.

PRESIDENT SLOAN, of General Motors sets a good example to other corporations and big business generally. Many bought preferred stock in Yellow Coach because General Motors controlled it. Dividends may be postponed indefinitely, no income for preferred stock purchasers.

THE ordinary plan would let the stock go down to 90, 80, 70, 60, 50, buy it in when holders got discouraged, just in time for dividends to start again.

Mr. Sloan offers preferred stockholders $95 a share now. Some financiers of the old school would call that childish. It is intelligent business honesty.

Trace Oil 'Slush Bonds' to G. O. P. Fund

REPUBLICAN LEADERS TO BE CALLED IN SENATE QUIZ

National Committee Used Teapot Bonds to Pay Off Campaign Debt, Nye Says.

Rockfeller Tells of Oil Stocks Holdings—"Willing to Help" Probers.

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—A political sensation featured the Senate's oil inquiry today when it was established for the first time that a part of the Continental Trading Company's mysterious $3,080,000 Liberty bond "slush fund" was used to pay off debts incurred by the Republican National Committee in the 1920 election.

This oft-repeated rumor was announced as fact by Senator Nye (Rep.) of North Dakota, chairman of the Senate committee, when he declared that a $75,000 gift to the Republican National Committee by Harry F. Sinclair in 1923 had been in bonds originally owned by the Continental. The gift was made 15 months after the Harding administration leased Teapot Dome to Sinclair.

PAID "COMMISSION"

On top of this, the Senate committee learned that $61,000 of the bonds had been paid to Henry Smith Osler, Canadian president of the Continental, as his "commission" for handling the Liberty bond fund.

These developments added to previous revelations accounted for a total of $1,169,000 of the $3,080,000 fund.

The Sinclair gift was traced by Basil Manly and another agent of the Senate committee. They learned that the Continental bonds were given Will H. Hays, then Republican national chairman, by Sinclair, and cashed by Gen. T. Coleman Dupont, now a senator from Delaware, to pay off a debt owed the Empire Trust Company of New York, by the Republican National Committee.

Hays, Dupont and William Boyce Thompson of Chicago, chairman of the Republican Ways and Means Committee in the Harding campaign, will be called as witnesses due to this development. Hays already has been requested to appear later in the month.

The Senate first heard of the Sinclair gift in 1923 when Hays said Sinclair had given the Republican National Committee $75,000 in cash. In the following March, Leon W. Baldwin, president of the Empire Trust Company, testified that Hays had turned over $75,000 in Liberty bonds to his bank to help pay off a $100,000 loan.

"The bonds were delivered by the Republican National Committee to Gen. Dupont, who is chairman of our board, and myself," said Baldwin on that occasion. "I think the bonds came from Mr.

BEBE DANIELS SERIOUSLY INJURED

Hurt

IN MOVIE—Bebe Daniels, motion picture star, was injured seriously Saturday, when she was swept from a motor truck while being filmed in an imitation Pullman car. She is confined to the hospital.

MOVIE STAR HURT IN FILM TRAIN 'WRECK'

Noted Actress Unconscious As Imitation Pullman Topples From Auto Truck.

Suffers Severe Injuries—Is "Very Weak," Hospital Attaches Say; Actor Hurt.

PASADENA, Cal., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Bebe Daniels, motion picture star, was seriously injured here this afternoon when an imitation Pullman car in which a picture was being filmed, fell from an automobile truck on which it had been mounted.

The actress lost consciousness for a few minutes and was very weak when she reached the hospital.

FOUR IN "WRECK"

Miss Daniels, Clarence Badger, director; James Hall, who was playing opposite the noted comedienne, and Roy Hunt, cameraman, were in the Pullman "set" when it struck a limb protruding over the road.

The imitation Pullman compartment was completely wrecked as it crashed to the pavement.

Hall, who was later found to be suffering from a broken rib, rescued Miss Daniels from the wreckage. Badger and Hunt escaped injury.

At the Emergency Hospital physicians said the actress suffered injuries in the pelvic region and a sprained back.

Miss Daniels escaped being cut by flying glass by throwing her hands over her face, but was unable to break the force of the fall. There were no physicians at the Emergency Hospital when the accident victims were brought in. Nurses gave first aid treatment before the doctors arrived.

At 2:45 p. m. Miss Daniels experienced considerable trouble in breathing and physicians feared she had suffered severe internal injuries.

Preparations were made to send her immediately to the Hollywood Hospital.

HER FIRST ACCIDENT

It was Miss Daniels' first accident as an actress, a career she started at the age of 3, in Richlands, Va., when she went on the legitimate stage playing baby parts.

Miss Daniels was given her first major screen role when she appeared as leading lady for Harold Lloyd. Lloyd's recognition of her ability raised her from the ranks of extras.

Miss Daniels makes her home in Santa Monica, Cal., and is unmarried.

WIN GAME BUT LOSE CLOTHES

Penn State's basketball team beat Carnegie Tech Saturday night but—

When the Nittany athletes returned to their dressing rooms in the Carnegie gym they found that things had happened. Some of the players were missing their shoes, others couldn't find their trousers and most of them sent up hopeless sighs for their vests, those sleeveless garments that are made for watches and wallets.

Carnegie students filled the breach with donations from their wardrobes. A collegiate search for the fashion thieves is already under way.

Chorines Flee Blaze In Filmy Negligees

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Twenty-five show girls clad in scanty negligees fled to the street today when a fire broke out next door to a theatrical hotel.

Lincoln Born 119 Years Ago

THE EMANCIPATOR'S IMMORTAL WORDS

FOURSCORE AND SEVEN YEARS AGO OUR FATHERS BROUGHT FORTH ON THIS CONTINENT, A NEW NATION, CONCEIVED IN LIBERTY, AND DEDICATED TO THE PROPOSITION THAT ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL. NOW WE ARE ENGAGED IN A GREAT CIVIL WAR, TESTING WHETHER THAT NATION, OR ANY NATION SO CONCEIVED AND SO DEDICATED, CAN LONG ENDURE. WE ARE MET ON A GREAT BATTLE FIELD OF THAT WAR. WE HAVE COME TO DEDICATE A PORTION OF THAT FIELD, AS A FINAL RESTING PLACE FOR THOSE WHO HERE GAVE THEIR LIVES THAT THAT NATION MIGHT LIVE. IT IS ALTOGETHER FITTING AND PROPER THAT WE SHOULD DO THIS. BUT, IN A LARGER SENSE, WE CANNOT DEDICATE—WE CANNOT CONSECRATE—WE CANNOT HALLOW—THIS GROUND. THE BRAVE MEN, LIVING AND DEAD, WHO STRUGGLED HERE, HAVE CONSECRATED IT, FAR ABOVE OUR POOR POWER TO ADD OR DETRACT. THE WORLD WILL LITTLE NOTE, NOR LONG REMEMBER, WHAT WE SAY HERE, BUT IT CAN NEVER FORGET WHAT THEY DID HERE. IT IS FOR US THE LIVING, RATHER, TO BE DEDICATED HERE TO THE UNFINISHED WORK WHICH THEY WHO FOUGHT HERE HAVE THUS FAR SO NOBLY ADVANCED. IT IS RATHER FOR US TO BE HERE DEDICATED TO THE GREAT TASK REMAINING BEFORE US—THAT FROM THESE HONORED DEAD WE TAKE INCREASED DEVOTION TO THAT CAUSE FOR WHICH THEY GAVE THE LAST FULL MEASURE OF DEVOTION—THAT WE HERE HIGHLY RESOLVE THAT THESE DEAD SHALL NOT HAVE DIED IN VAIN—THAT THIS NATION, UNDER GOD, SHALL HAVE A NEW BIRTH OF FREEDOM—AND THAT GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE, BY THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PEOPLE, SHALL NOT PERISH FROM THE EARTH.

LINCOLN, BY LORADO TAFT

Postpone Mine Quiz Action Until Monday

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Definite action by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on the resolution of Senator Johnson (Rep.), of California, for an investigation of the bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, was delayed today until Monday because of inability to get a quorum.

Chairman Watson declared yesterday after hearing Phillip Murray, a vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, that a case had been made out and an inquiry would be ordered.

The committee also will consider an amendment by Senator Reed (Rep.) of Pennsylvania proposing also an investigation of coal freight rate charges. Senator Johnson accepted the amendment, but said he would not press it if there was serious objection. Senator Sackett (Rep.) of Kentucky opposes it.

B. & O. FREIGHT RUNS AMUCK

CLAYSVILLE, Pa., Feb. 11.—Seventeen freight cars, running wild, after the rear end of second section train No. 85 on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad had parted from the lead cars, leaped the rails, crashed into the Vienna Station, swerved across the tracks, tearing up rails and hewing down telephone poles and overturned in Little Wheeling Creek at 5:10 o'clock tonight. No person was injured. Traffic was tied up for 12 hours.

The train made of mixed freight broke in two on a grade and jumped the tracks near Vienna station, four miles from the Pennsylvania-West Virginia state line. Part of the station used for both passengers and freight was cut away and the platform ripped out. Rails were torn up for several hundred feet in the dash of the cars.

BLAME AUTO IN LEVINE CRASH

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—An absent-minded motorist today foiled the take-off of the monoplane "Columbia" in an attempt to recapture the world's duration flight record. The flight now is scheduled for tomorrow, weather permitting.

Just as Charles A. Levine, with his pilot, Wilmer Stultz, sped down the runway in an attempt to take-off with their heavily loaded plane, a motorist drove directly in their path. Stultz veered sharply, bringing the plane to a halt with a dislodged tail skid and a broken rudder post.

Levine, who has had his trans-Atlantic plane groomed for a flight of uncertain nature for several days, announced when he arrived at the field that a projected flight to Havana with Miss Mabel Boll as a passenger would be abandoned for the time being.

VOTE TRIALS OPEN TUESDAY

Five members of the election board in the Twentieth district, Tenth ward, will go on trial Tuesday in Criminal Court on conspiracy charges.

The trial will be watched with particular interest by some 150 other election officials against whom similar charges are standing—all the result of alleged inaccuracies in the counting of primary ballots.

The defendants to face court consist of a woman, Carrie Weaver, and four men, Michael McAndrews, Jacob Steine, E. J. Bennett and E. N. Fink.

Jail Proposed for Phone 'Snoopers'

SEATTLE, Wash., Feb. 11.—The indoor sport of listening in on the party telephone line may become a hazardous occupation if an ordinance drafted by the city attorney today is adopted by the council.

Both "wire snooping" and "wire tapping" would constitute misdemeanors under the proposed ordinance and a fine of $500 and imprisonment of 90 days is provided for conviction.

FAIL TO FIND TWO OTHERS; DEATH TOLL CLIMBS TO 12

Twenty-seven Men Still Missing Somewhere in Fiery Workings of Ontario Pit.

Little Hope Held Out for Majority of Entombed Miners. Tell Graphic Story.

By International News Service.

TIMMINS, Ont., Feb. 11.—The burning Hollinger mine here tonight began yielding up its human victims, entrapped in the subterranean inferno since Friday.

With 12 known dead and 27 other miners still missing, rescue workers equipped with gas masks and fire fighting equipment continued to explore the burning Hollinger mine.

Thirteen men have already been brought to the surface alive. Two others were seen wandering in the workings, but when the rescuers returned they had disappeared.

FEAR REST DEAD

It is feared most of the missing have succumbed to the fire and poisonous gases.

Only two of the dead have been definitely identified, they were Ira Graham and Martin Stevens.

The last six bodies were brought from the eighth level of No. 11 shaft. Three were on the slope and three in the cross-cut. Six had been removed yesterday.

The first seven men rescued were brought up at 1:30.

All were in good shape. Five of them were able to walk from the cage to the temporary dressing station beside No. 11 shaft, up which they were brought by rescue parties.

These men were all brought from the 425-foot level. The first of them was an elderly man, George Zoleb.

The other rescued men are: B. Krakonk, A. Teholin, J. Kruske, B. Kurunen, F. Jackson and L. Lizzie.

It was the hoist bell ringing at the mouth of the shaft that gave the anxious people waiting above ground their first indication that there was life in the gas-filled pit. Instantly the hoist shot down to the 550 level.

There, waiting calmly as though he had just finished his day's work and was coming off shift was Zoleb. Determined not to die without making at least one last struggle for his life he left the five men with whom he had spent the anxious hours and crawled on his stomach to the shaft. When the hoist was

Rescue Train Speeds to Mine Disaster Scene

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 11.

SPEEDING along at a rate of approximately 70 miles an hour, a special relief train passed through here early this evening en route to Timmins, Ontario, to aid in the rescue of approximately 50 miners entombed in the gas and flame filled workings of the Hollinger gold mine there. The rescue train is expected to reach the mine tonight.

Lindy Perfect Youth, Says Edison at 81

FORT MYERS, Fla., Feb. 11.—(INS.)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is the "perfect specimen" of young manhood and a good example for the younger generation to follow, Thomas Alva Edison, world-famed inventor, today told newspapermen at his Fort Myers estate in his annual birthday interview.

Edison was 81 today. He enjoyed his annual sparring match with newspaper reporters, while hundreds of feet of film made a photographic record of the event.

When asked for an opinion as to the publication of crime news and photographs, the wizard declared himself in favor of crime news, adding, however, that it should be cut short. The average newspaper reader wants something "more pleasant," he said.

"How about Will Rogers for President?" he was asked.

"Newspaper joke," the reply came, quickly.

"In what way has the moral standard of the younger generation changed since your boyhood days?" was another question.

"There has been a change for the better, although the changes are slow," he said.

Taking a slam at modern fashions, Edison frowned on the present

Fire Drives 300 Soldiers Out of Condemned Fort

By Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.

THREE HUNDRED soldiers escaped from an antiquated fortress at Fort Tompkins, Staten Island, which broke into flames today.

"This fortress was erected in 1859," stated Maj. E. V. Cutrer, commanding the Third Battalion of the Sixteenth Infantry. "Since the war it has been used for housing soldiers, a purpose for which it is not adapted."

Fort Tompkins is one of a group of unsuitable buildings for quartering enlisted men which has been condemned by the Congressional committee named at the request of William Randolph Hearst.

70, He Leaves to Wed Widow He Never Saw

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—An elderly wooer departed from the sophisticated haunts of Greenwich Village today to keep a rendezvous with romance in the wide open spaces of Iowa. L. Hammitt, 70, a widower, was on his way to Des Moines, Ia., where he expects to meet his correspondence fiancee, Mrs. Alice Hite, 70, a widower of Indianola, Ia., whom he has never seen. She plays a harp in the church at Indianola.

Dry Agent Jailed for Dodging Guard Drill

Languishing in the county jail over this week-end is a Federal prohibition agent who neglected to show up for drill in the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Field Artillery, National Guard.

Corp. Edward J. Lawler, who ferrets out professional purveyors of the Demon Rum, was consigned to the brig Saturday to await court martial.

It seems it was another prohibition agent who preferred the charges against Corp. Lawler, the prosecuting agent being Lieut. Theodore Coates, who, at the time of Lawler's failure to drill, was his commanding officer.

Lieut. Harry Cole, present commanding officer, explained Saturday that Lawler hadn't attended drill "since last camp"—which was last summer. Lieut. Cole understood that Lawler had a date with the court martial board last week and failed to keep it—a failure which prompted his early incarceration.

Lawler must remain in the brig until at least Monday night when he will be arraigned at the court martial in Logan Armory.

New Trial Plea Delays Pronouncing of 'Fox's' Doom

LEGAL RIGHTS DENIED KILLER, COUNSEL SAYS

Compelled to Be Witness Against Self, Walsh Asserts—Hickman Smiles.

COURT ROOM, LOS ANGELES, Feb. 11.—"The Fox's" sentence has been postponed, much to the delight of "The Fox."

William Edward Hickman smiled broadly and with an air of hope that something might yet turn up to save him from the gallows, when his attorney today appeared in court and demanded a new trial on the ground that Hickman had been deprived of the right of a trial by jury.

Judge J. J. Trabucco was to have sentenced Hickman today, but after hearing "The Fox's" attorney postponed this action until Tuesday morning. However, Judge Trabucco indicated, by instructing District Attorney Keyes to have the state's principal witnesses in court Tuesday, that a new trial would be denied. These witnesses include Perry M. Parker, father of the murdered Marion Parker. They are expected to give brief testimony to aid the court in determining the degree of Hickman's guilt.

Contending that Hickman had been deprived of the right of a trial by jury, due to the proceedings under the new California law governing the defense of insanity in criminal cases, Jerome Walsh, his chief counsel, entered the motion for a new trial.

He alleged that there were "errors of law" in his client's sanity trial; that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; that the court erred in granting the state the right to issue jury challenges after the state had passed the jury; that the defendant had been legally deprived of his right to a jury trial for murder and that in violation of the Constitution of the United States he had been compelled to be a witness against himself. Attorneys interpreted the last claim to refer to the use of the murderer's confessions as trial evidence.

CITES "ERRORS OF LAW"

Walsh, reading his motion for a new trial, asserted as further grounds that the verdict was contrary to the evidence: that the court erred in instructing the jury, and that the jury received evidence out of court.

Hickman, entering the courtroom, jaunty and smiling, had been called to his feet by the court to hear his sentence imposed. As Judge Trabucco apparently reached the point in his relation of the crime, trial and conviction at which he was to sentence the kidnaper and killer, he paused to ask if there was any reason that the sentence should not be imposed. Then Walsh made his motion.

The prisoner stood erect, with shoulders squared and looking directly ahead. Once, as the judge's powerful voice informed him of the crime for which he stood convicted, Hickman's shoulders jerked violently.

After Walsh had read the grounds for his motion, he informed the court that all would be entered in affidavit form.

The court then ruled that the sentencing would be delayed until Tuesday morning, when arguments on the motion first would be heard.

"Perfect Age" Picks Lindy as "Perfect Youth"

HAILS THE ACE—Eighty-one years old Saturday, Thomas Edison, inventor extraordinary, announced without qualification to a battery of reporters that a certain young man named Charles A. Lindbergh, also known as Colonel and Slim, was the perfect specimen of young manhood and a good example. This camera story shows Edison (left) when about Lindbergh's age today, and as he appears today. Col. Lindbergh is shown (right center) as he appeared in the a-b-c days and as the young man who crossed the pond without even hesitating.

LEGISLATIVE FIGHT LOOMS ON NORTH SIDE

Organization Leaders Determined to Defeat Zak in Seventh District.

While the congressional fight between Alderman P. J. Sullivan and Congressman John M. Morin looms as the major battle in the primary here, the North Side is developing a legislative skirmish of its own.

The battleground there is the Seventh District, composed of the Twenty-second, Twenty-third, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth wards, now represented by James Wettach and Frank J. Zak. Organization leaders of the district are determined to defeat Zak.

Zak, who broke the organization slate in 1926 after carrying his case to the courts to prove that he had been counted out, is again a candidate. According to stories yesterday, he is attempting to make an alliance with former Police Commissioner Earl Means, who was removed from the force on charges growing out of the riots and gun battles that marked the primary election last spring.

According to Zak's friends, Means may be his running mate in the coming campaign. The organization will support Wettach for re-election and probably will select former Representative Chase Michel as his running mate, although that as yet has not been definitely decided.

COMPLICATES SITUATION

The situation in the district is complicated by the appearance of Harry Pearse, 1906 North Charles street, as a candidate. Pearse, who for 17 years was connected with the circulation departments of the Pittsburgh Post and Sun, announced his candidacy yesterday. He is a native of Pittsburgh and has lived on the North Side for 11 years.

The plans of Congressman Morin still were doubtful last night. News dispatches from Washington indicated that while he is a candidate for re-election, he has not yet definitely abandoned all thought of entering the senatorial race as a candidate against David A. Reed. Morin has informed friends here that he does not know just when he will return to Pittsburgh.

Talk of persuading Sullivan to retire from the fight is regarded as useless in political circles here. Sullivan has the support of the ward chairmen in every one of the 10 wards of the Thirty-fourth Congressional District, the active aid of such potential political leaders as Senators James J. Coyne and M. G. Leslie, Councilman James F. Malone, Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong and Mayor Charles H. Kline. The group aligned against Morin is extremely powerful politically, and State Chairman W. L. Mellon has given no indication that he disapproves of Sullivan's candidacy.

The only open candidate against Senator Reed to date is William Adams, manager of a Harrisburg hotel. His petitions are being circulated here and elsewhere throughout the state. Cards urging his candidacy appeared here yesterday.

DRY DELEGATES TO BE NAMED BY COUNTIES

State Prohibition Party Discards Election by Congressional Districts.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 11.—Delegates to the national convention of the Prohibition party will be elected by counties in Pennsylvania instead of by congressional districts, it became known here today. In the past the party has elected its delegates the same as other political organizations. Under this system the party will select 76 delegates, Dr. B. E. P. Prugh, of this city, state chairman, said today.

Dr. Prugh in reading the rules o. the party found that delegates were to be elected by counties. He also learned there was nothing in the state election laws to prevent this procedure. The matter was discussed with George D. Thorn, deputy secretary of the commonwealth in charge of the election bureau. Mr. Thorn was told by the Department of Justice that the p. ty rules could govern the election of delegates.

The Prohibition party rules provide that each county is entitled to at least one delegate, regardless of the Prohibition vote in the district. In counties having 1,000 or more Prohibition votes one delegate is allowed for each 1,000 or fraction above. By this calculation Philadelphia will be allowed to elect four delegates, and Allegheny seven, the state chairman says.

Mine Relief Workers Plead for More Money

The central committee of social workers who have been caring for the destitute in the coal towns with funds provided by the business men's committee and the clergymen's committee will be known hereafter as the joint relief administration for miners' families, it was announced yesterday.

A statement issued by the organization sets forth that while contributions of food and clothing are welcomed, money is preferred, because "the administration committee are able to provide the family needs more quickly and efficiently this way. A corps of workers, who would be doing more good in the field, is necessary to assort and send out clothing and food."

The workers, it is stated, go into the homes, talk with the wives, advise them, and, after a careful, intelligent investigation, take care of their needs under friendly supervision, on a tested budget basis.

"The women as a whole," it is stated, "welcome this treatment. And, instead of having a tendency to pauperize, this system teaches them to keep up their morale, be better housewives and mothers, and does not cause them embarrassment. One family refused to accept any help. Their reason was that they had been held up as as examples of abject poverty so often that they would rather starve than have this treatment continue."

The executive committee of the joint relief administration is composed of Dr. E. N. Clopper, secretary of the Pittsburgh Federation of Social Agencies, chairman; Dr. Ralph B. Urmy, chairman of the clergymen's fund, and A. K. Oliver, chairman of the executive committee of the business men's committee.

Three basketball games will be given at Duquesne University next Saturday night for the benefit of the miners. The Osceola Club will be matched with the J. J. Veronas, the Reliance Life Insurance team with the Duquesne Light team and the Enoch Rauhs with the J. J. Mieles. The Monarch Quartet will furnish music. Tickets may be obtained at miners' relief headquarters at the old South school, Ross and Diamond streets.

ASKS $250,000 IN "BALM" SUIT

CADIZ, O., Feb. 11.—Suit for $250,000 was filed today in Common Pleas Court by Mrs. Nettie Shields, 30, of New Athens, in a heart balm action against her neighbor, Mrs. Anna R. Wallace, whom Mrs. Shields charges stole her husband's affections and wrecked her home. Mrs. Shields is the mother of four children and Mrs. Wallace the mother of two.

Mrs. Shields and her children are staying with her parents. The Wallace family is reputed to be one of the wealthiest in this section.

LINK OFFICIAL IN AUTO THEFT

A report that an employe of the motor vehicle department at Harrisburg has been dealing with a band of automobile thieves, and furnishing forged titles and auto owners' licenses, is being investigated by Benjamin W. Eynon, registrar of motor vehicles.

City detectives investigating the operations of John Montgomery, 27, and James Cooper, 30, of Philadelphia, arrested last Tuesday, are said to have obtained a clue which connected the state employe with a gang of auto thieves.

Montgomery and Cooper are suspected of being salesmen of stolen cars. They were arraigned last Wednesday before Magistrate George H. England and held for further investigation.

Philadelphia police have asked the police here to hold the prisoners pending their arrival.

BUTLER BANKER GIVEN 3 YEARS

Three years in a federal penitentiary was the sentence handed James F. Hutzler, 65, cashier of the former Merchants National Bank of Butler, by Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker on Saturday.

Hutzler was the second official of the bank to be sentenced for false reports made to the Comptroller of the Currency from April, 1925, to April, 1927, Thomas M. Baker, vice president, having been sent to the Atlanta Penitentiary for three years.

Two hundred and forty thousand dollars was involved in the reported juggling of funds, stockholders of the bank assuming the loss. The bank later was absorbed by the Citizens Savings and Trust Company of Butler.

fad of high school girls and young women wearing overalls and pants.

"Fashions come in waves," he said. "How they originate or why they come and go, nobody seems to know," he did, shaking his head with a smile.

"Do you believe in eternity or any sort of life after death?" some one asked him.

"It's a 50-50 proposition with me. One way or the other is my present belief," he replied.

"How will you spend your time in eternity?"

"Experimenting, if there are any facilities," he shot back.

Holding fast to his opposing views of capital punishment, even in the case of William Edward Hickman at Los Angeles, Edison declared "society is rich enough to confine our criminals for life."

"Killing men," he added, "is a relic of our barbaric past. The pardoning power should be severely restricted. I most certainly believe in just punishment, but I maintain that the death penalty is wrong and should be abolished. It will only be a matter of time before all states will do away with it and then society will have wiped out one more evil practice."

RAPS SUPERSTITIOUS BUNK

"Do you think that the modern American is drifting away from religion? he was asked.

"Not from true religion," he answered. "But from superstition and bunk. The churches are themselves to blame for lack of interest. People no longer can be fooled and until the churches make some necessary changes the membership lists will continue to dwindle," he declared.

Edison continues skeptical about radio and the talking movies. When asked to express his views on television, he said that it would be developed some day, but would hardly be practical "for general use."

"It is still in the experimental stage," he said. "It all sounds reasonable, just like radio, but there is a lot of perfecting to be done before we can call it a wonderful thing."

The inventor pointed out that he is entirely satisfied with his life. And if he had to live over again, he would prefer to do just as he had done in the past 81 years. He confided that in reality he is 162 years old.

"You see," he explained when the writers gasped in astonishment, "I have lived and worked in two shifts and I will soon be 200 years old," he chuckled.

Getting back to his present work, rubber experiments, the wizard said he is making rapid progress. He said, however, it was not his desire to "break the British rubber monopoly."

As newspapermen were about to depart, Harvey S. Firestone, one of Edison's closest friends, entered the laboratory. The reporters lingered to hear the greeting.

"Are you for Hoover?" Edison shot at the tire magnate.

"Certainly," was the reply.

NOT AS SKINNY AS FORD

"Tom, are you losing weight?" Firestone asked.

"Yes, I have lost 25 pounds since last year. That old stomach trouble, you know. Have had it for 40 years. Doctors say chewing tobacco caused it, but I don't believe it. But say, I am not as skinny as Henry Ford yet. He has had a hard year and is so thin that you can read a newspaper right through him."

Autoist Hurled from Car in Trolley Crash

Franklin Anderson, 9, of 1009 Western avenue, was thrown through the windshield of the automobile of Harry Gibson, 1219 Reddour street, when a Reedsdale street car crashed into the machine on Manchester Bridge Saturday evening. His injuries were dressed at Allegheny General Hospital, six stitches closing cuts on his head.

CITY PLANNING RIVER TERMINAL

In anticipation of increased use of the inland waterways on completion of the Ohio river improvements next year, a subject studied by the Chamber of Commerce on its Mississippi-Gulf tour in 1927, W. L. McKinney, assistant traffic secretary of that body, has prepared for shippers a comprehensive report on river terminals and transfer facilities, freight rates, handling costs, wharf charges and shipping time.

Declaring that the city is considering the construction of an up-to-date river terminal, Mr. McKinney directed attention to United States engineers' recommendation that it be under municipal control, have rail connection, preferably a belt line reaching all railroads and the principal industries, provide adequate warehouse and storage space, and have suitable mechanical appliances for handling freight.

WJAS GIVES RADIO BENEFIT

Hundreds of telephone calls pledging aid poured into WJAS Saturday night as the result of the benefit radio program given for destitute miners' families.

The responses were not only addresses where trucks were to call for clothes and other donations, but also promises of money. Cash is said to be most needed.

The entertainers were: Capitol Limited Trio, Ukulele "Pat" Haley, the Bowman Sisters, Martin Dixon, tenor; Chauncey Franklin, ukulele player; Buck O'Day, tenor; Fred Myers, tenor; Mrs. C. A. Kinnard, soprano; Abe Bloom, tenor; Pegeen Lanigan, soprano; Gene Dixon, Charles Wilson, Margarita Condon and Jerry Rubin; Arthur Becker and Elmer Meyers, pianists, and Alma Sloan Scarberry and Harvey Doyle of The Sun-Telegraph.

Hays. They were of $75,000 par value."

It was this testimony of Hays and Baldwin that led to the revelation that Sinclair used $75,000 of the Continental bonds in paying this debt. The Senate investigators traced the numbers of the bonds, which were cashed by Dupont, and found that the first $25,000 of them tallied with those issued originally to the Continental company. Nye announced that the remaining bonds also were known to have been Continental bonds.

The investigators learned that Dupont took the bonds from the bank, converted them into cash and used the proceeds, along with a personal contribution, to pay off the whole $100,000 debt. At the time, Dupont was chairman of the board of the Empire Trust Company.

CONFIRMS OLD RUMOR

This revelation confirmed a rumor that has been going the rounds of Washington for the last five years that the Republican national committee had been paid some of the Continental Company's "profits." On one occasion, a newspaper story charged Sinclair had given the committee 75,000 shares of his stock, valued at between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 to pay off the whole Harding campaign deficit. This was indignantly denied by Hays at the time, but it was then that the former Republican national chairman first told of the $75,000 gift. He denied though that the gift was paid to him in bonds, saying that he could not remember as he had not personally handled the gift.

From two officials of the Dominion Bank of Canada, the Senate committee further learned that Osler had shared personally in distribution of the Continental bonds. Edward Scott Howard of Toronto, an inspector of the bank, and Albert W. Rice, an assistant agent in New York, told the committee Osler received a "two per cent commission" for buying the bonds for the Continental. On a total of $3,000,000, this commission amounted to $71,600.

"The bonds always were delivered to Osler in person," said Howard. "They were always divided into four equal packages before delivery. Mr. Osler asked us to prepare the packages in that way. He never gave any explanation of why this should be done and I never asked him."

"Were any names ever put on these packages?" he was asked.

"No."

JOHN D. TESTIFIES

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Pro. claiming himself the friend of "honest business" and confessing himself perturbed and alarmed over the "general suspicion" that now hovers over the oil industry and the business structure of the country because of recent scandals, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., went before the Senate Public Lands Committee today and offered to do everything in his power to clear up the mysteries of the Teapot Dome case.

Rockefeller told the committee he owned stock in a "hundred corporations," and that obviously he could not be personally cognizant of all the details, but he declared he would cause to be instituted at once a search of the securities in all the corporations in which he is interested to ascertain if they have any of the $3,000,000 in Liberty bonds that figured in the Continental Trading deal.

"I can set on foot an inquiry at once," he told Senator Walsh, after Walsh had suggested looking into the treasuries of his corporations. "Do you mean all the companies in which I have stock?"

"Yes," said Walsh.

"I'll be happy to do that," said the oil king.

Rockefeller said he deplored Col. Robert W. Stewart's refusal to tell the committee all he knew about the Continental deal, but he repeated several times his confidence in Stewart's honor and integrity. He declared he never had given his support to any of his executives in whom he did not have complete confidence in their integrity, and that he would not in this case.

FRENCH FLIERS IN NEW YORK

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Dieudonne Costes and Joseph Le Brix, French goodwill fliers, whose course has led them over four continents during the past four months, landed here at 10:22 o'clock today from Washington.

A group of Army pursuit planes escorted the Frenchmen to the field and circled in the air above as the biplane "Nungesser-Coli," which has a service record of 67,000 miles, was brought to a deft landing.

Costes and Le Brix have flown more than 22,000 miles on their present trip, which has taken them from France to Africa, across the Atlantic to South America, and to the United States.

The fliers were greeted when they landed by Edward L. Stanton for Mayor Walker, and Maxime Mongendre, French consul general. As the consul general appeared at the field he was accorded an 11-gun salute.

About 500 people were waiting to greet the French fliers and were held in check by soldiers and state police. The Nungesser-Coli was wheeled into a hangar, and Costes and Le Brix prepared to leave for New York by automobile.

Americanization Plan Pleases Mex. Consul

Accompanied by Albert V. Rosell, president of the Latin-American Club, Servando Barrera Guerra, Mexican consul in Pittsburgh, last night visited the Americanization classes that are being held for Mexicans in St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church, Homestead. Mr. Guerra expressed himself as much pleased with what is being done to improve the condition of the local Mexicans and to promote friendly relations between the United States and Mexico. He said he would write to his government about it.

Rescue 13 From Mine; Death List Now 12

brought to the surface he was on it. He brought the news that five other men were alive.

Albert E. Stanlake, one of the rescued miners, recounted the hours he spent yesterday groping for an avenue of escape from the 400-foot level of the mine before he collapsed.

Completely unaware that they were being quietly cut off by the poisonous smoke and gas, Stanlake and his mate worked for three hours after the outbreak of the fire before discovering their plight.

TELLS STORY OF TERROR

His story may illustrate the fate that has befallen a score of others underground.

"About a quarter past eleven we quit for lunch and started down the drift to get it," Stanlake said.

"Before we had got half way I caught a whiff of sharp smelling smoke and said to my mate, 'Some one has a fire somewhere.' It did not occur to me even that anything was wrong, but a few yards down the drift we ran into thick smoke and knew that we would have to get out.

"We headed down the cross-cut for No. 11 shaft, hoping to get to the surface, but it was no use, we had to turn back. The cross-cut was full of strong smelling wood smoke and we both began to get dizzy.

FROTH AT MOUTH

"By this time we were both gasping and frothing at the mouth. We headed back along the cross-cut hoping to find another way out.

"The air was clearer here and we ran into a gang of scalers and they were working up near the roof where the smoke did not reach them, and they had not found out that anything was wrong. They were all foreigners, and we could not make them understand anything, but they understood fast enough when they came down and smelled the smoke.

"I don't remember much of what happened. The smoke was burning my eyes and throat, and it was all I could do to breath. I have no idea how long we were down there, either or where we went. We just went on and on, and half the time we couldn't see where we were going, the smoke was so thick. It must have been two hours at least that we were down there, and by the end of that time I knew I could not stand it much longer. About that time someone took a pick and cut into the air pipe that carries compressed air to the drills. After that it was a little better, and some time later, I don't know how long, we saw lights signalling, and Capt. Young and Mr. Williams, the mine superintendent were there with a lot of others.

"I guess I must have keeled over about then, because that is the last I remember till they brought me to hospital. I don't know what happened to the others."

Anti-Third Term Vote Kills "Draft Coolidge" Move

SENATE ACTION MORALLY BINDS PARTY CHIEFS

Foss Leads Unsuccessful Attack on Resolution—House May Refuse Action.

By GEORGE HOLMES,
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The Senate's adoption of the LaFollette resolution condemning a third term in the White House was regarded today by practical politicians here as constituting a death blow to the "draft Coolidge" movement which has been kept alive by devious means since the President said "I do not choose to run."

Legally, of course, the Senate's action would not serve as any barrier to President Coolidge's candidacy for another term. The significance of it lies in the fact that more than two-thirds of the Senate have now spoken against it, and that of this number 18 are members of the President's own party. They have gone definitely on record as stating that any departure from the two-term tradition "would be unwise, unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our free institutions." That is the language of the LaFollette resolution.

From the standpoint of practical politics, it was pointed out today, all of these 18 Republican Senators, representing 12 states, would be morally bound to oppose any attempt by the Kansas City convention to renominate Mr. Coolidge next June. It is that fact, rather than the Senate's action as a body, which impressed politicians today with the futility of attempting to "draft" Mr. Coolidge—even if he were acquiescent.

Most of the Republican votes in favor of the resolution came from the Progressive group, but there was a sprinkling of regular votes as well. Senator Gillett, of Massachusetts, was one of the regulars who voted in favor of it. He has been at times the White House spokesman on the floor of the Senate.

There was some rare debate and political by-play featured the hours of debate that preceded the final vote. As originally introduced, there was a final paragraph to the resolution which said: "The Senate commends the observance of this tradition by the President."

Senator Fess (R.), of Ohio, the leader of the "draft Coolidge" movement, led a strenuous fight to knock out this clause, whereupon Senator La Follette ironically observed that if the President's friends did not wish to compliment him for observing the tradition he was willing to withdraw it. And Senator Norris (R.), of Nebraska, humorously observed that the President's "own friends are insulting him" by professing not to believe the sincerity of his self-elimination.

HOUSE MAY REVOLT

An effort will be made to pass the La Follette resolution in the House. Representative Beck (Rep.) of Wisconsin has sponsored it there. However, administration leaders in the lower branch declared themselves against it.

Representative Dyer (Rep.) of Missouri, chairman of the judiciary committee, said it would be given consideration, but he denounced the measure as "a lot of foolishness" and predicted it would not be given a majority vote in the committee.

"The people are well able to take care of themselves in this matter of the two-term tradition," said Dyer, "and Congress can find much more important work than this meaningless resolution."

Pershing O. K.'s Hearst Plea for Free Press

By Universal Service.

BOSTON, Feb. 11.—A hearty stamp of approval was placed today on an editorial appearing in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and other Hearst newspapers on the President's appeal for an American press free from foreign influence by Gen. John J. Pershing, leader of America's Expeditionary Forces during the World War.

"That is sound American doctrine," Gen. Pershing said.

The famous general placed his approval on the editorial at a local hotel, where he had gone to deliver an address before the Women's Republican Club.

Gen. Pershing concurred with the views of President Coolidge, whose appeal for an unfettered, patriotic press is in effect an indorsement of the position of the Hearst papers, as an editorial and its accompanying letter from Mr. Hearst points out.

"The President wants to stop this business of foreign governments influencing American governmental policies by subtle control of the American press," said Gen. Pershing.

These words accurately interpreted the President's meaning, he said, and he added that the heart of the President's message was contained in the words:

"Whenever any of the press of our country undertake to exert their influence in behalf of foreign influence, the candor of the situation would be greatly increased if their foreign connections were publicly disclosed."

DRY VIOLATORS PAY $17,081

Fines aggregating $17,081 were paid last week into the coffers of the United States Treasury by 139 defendants in the Federal District Court here, who pleaded to informations and indictments charging violations of the national prohibition law. It was the first week of a special four-week term of court. With the exception of one plea and sentence, all the cases were disposed of the first five days.

Judge F. P. Schoenmaker was on the bench and the government represented by Assistant United States District Attorneys Ralph H. Smith and Joseph A. Richardson. In addition to the pleas, 15 suits involving liquor violation charges were heard by juries. A large number of other liquor cases are scheduled for trial during the remaining three weeks' term of court.

Honored

PRESIDENT—Miss Flora Snyder, national president of the Junior Hadassah, who will leave shortly for New York, where she will reside for several months, will be honored at a testimonial dinner in the Morrowfield Hotel Tuesday.

Few Men Marry Girls Who Pet, Co-Eds Say

By International News Service.

IOWA CITY, Ia., Feb. 11.—Smoking and drinking are not so bad except when done in an effort to "be smart."

"Petting" is necessary if a girl wishes to date the same fellow again.

The single standard of morals, if it ever materializes, will be far in the future, because men will either have to rise to the standards of women or women sink to the standards of men.

So say co-eds at the University of Iowa.

The occasion for their remarks was an open forum in the double standard of morals sponsored by Sigma Delta Phi, women's forensic society at the Iowa Memorial Union. Only women were permitted to attend the discussion.

Dual responsibility exists for the double standard, the consensus ran. Women are responsible because they look down on the girl who has "fallen," and men are to blame because they won't marry her.

Few men marry the girl who "pets," the co-eds unanimously declared. They like to date her—in fact they don't call again unless she does pet, but the girls they marry are the non-petting variety.

The first date is a trial affair, one girl said. If the girl "is game" she is asked again—if not, no more dates.

As far as drinking, smoking and other indiscretions go, the University of Iowa isn't any worse than other universities, the group of 30 united in stressing.

If a girl wants to smoke or drink a bit in her room it isn't any worse for her than for a man, they decided.

Admitting that drinking by girls in the University of Iowa campus was a matter of serious consideration some of the group said that a reaction against girl's drinking had come from men on the campus in the last two years. The men drink but don't want the girls to do so, was the opinion.

The matter of the opposition to the lecture of Maude Royden, famous English woman preacher, because she smokes cigarets, came up for discussion.

"If she had come here eight years ago someone would have objected because she had bobbed hair," was the way one girl disposed of the matter. And that seemed to be the general opinion.

Beating Charge False, Says Senator Wheeler

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, who inspected the Curry mine district last Sunday telegraphed Justice of the Peace J. M. O'Rourke, of Curry, that he would be unable to come here to investigate the 12 charges brought against O'Rourke by employes of the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation. Wheeler characterized the charges as outrageous.

The charges were based on alleged beatings inflicted by O'Rourke.

Present Mine Issues Cited in Hammond's Report

STABILIZATION THROUGH JOINT STUDY URGED

U. S. 1923 Findings Condemn Violence, Nationalization and Compulsory Arbitration

In preparation for the Senate investigation of the coal strike operators and union leaders are reading the report of the United States Coal Commission, headed by John Hays Hammond, which made an exhaustive study of labor relations in the industry a few years ago. The commission's findings, published in September, 1923, have a direct bearing on the present situation, because it investigated and made recommendations on many of the very questions that are at issue now and that are to receive the attention of the senatorial inquirers.

In the preamble to its recommendations the commission said:

"The public is not satisfied with the service it receives from the coal industry. The United States Coal Commission finds no reason to believe that a dependable supply of coal at a reasonable price is inconsistent with reasonable conditions of life and citizenship for the miners, or with a reasonable return on judicious investments."

URGES STABILIZATION

Over and over again in the report the commission calls for joint and individual study by miners and operators, with the co-operation of the government, of the problems of production, marketing and storage of coal, with a view to stabilizing the industry and doing away with irregularity of employment. It lays emphasis also on the desirability of conciliation and arbitration of disputes. Careful collection of the facts, educational service, good operating management, and study of the psychology of the men at work, to promote good relations, are urged.

Here are some of the commission's specific recommendations on matters that are to the fore in the present controversy:

"We recommend that each side place some check upon provocative and truculent publicity which tends to undermine good relations.

"We recommend the universal establishment in the non union fields of check-weighmen selected and paid by the men as a means of insuring confidence in weights.

"We condemn violence, thuggery and gun work, violation of the law and disturbance of the peace, whether practiced by the union to enforce complete unionization, or by the operators to prevent it.

"We recommend that such destructive labor policies as the use of spies, and the use of deputy sheriffs as paid company guards . . . be abolished.

"We recommend the recognition of the right by the union to encourage non union workers to join the union by the example of service to its members in the union field, by showing where the advances in the union field have helped the non union workers, and by peaceful and honest persuasion of every sort.

"We recommend the recognition of the similar right of the non-union operator, by good works and honest persuasion without force, to maintain a non union status.

"We recognize the irritating effects of the 'check-off' to the operater, especially in the collection of special fines and assessments. And we recognize its injurious effects upon the union in divorcing the problems of income from the winning of membership, and in the resulting lack of closeness of contact and of educational service and control by the higher officers to the lower officers, and to the rank and file members of the union. We believe that the unsettling effects of casting out this practice, however, might more than overbalance the gains.

"We call attention to the fact that the operators are not so effectively organized for labor relations as the miners and that, both as a defensive and as a co-operative measure, there should be effective district and national organization and a national labor policy among union operators.

"We do not advocate nationalization as a means of meeting the national strike or other parts of the problem of labor relations.

"We recommend against compulsory arbitration as a means of preventing a national strike, because we do not believe in discretion-made law in either the industrial or political fields, and because there is no way to enforce a compulsory award which does not involve enforced operation or enforced labor.

"We believe that incorporation of the unions would not have the effect of binding the union to its contracts, and making it responsible, often predicted for it. Contracts can now be made if both parties wish, with effective binding power, but ordinarily neither side desires that wage contracts shall be specific enough to be legally binding through judicial enforcement."

The members of the commission, in addition to Mr. Hammond, were Thomas R. Marshall, Clark Howell, George Otis Smith, Edward T. Devine and Charles P. Neill.

Mrs. Mountz to Aid G.O.P. in Home County

BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 11.—Thwarted in her desire to secure a place on the slate of delegates-at-large to the Republican National Convention to be held at Kansas City in June, Mrs. Ella J. Mountz, of Smiths Mills, Clearfield county, will make no contest for a place, but will devote her energies to local political activities.

A congressional campaign in the Twenty-third district, composed of the counties of Center, Clearfield, Cameron and McKean, looms in the offing and there is yet no certainty as to how interesting it may develop. The incumbent, Congressman J. Mitchell Chase, Republican, has announced as a candidate for re-election, and will probably be given his party nomination without a contest. But it is rumored that the Democrats have in view a strong man to put up in opposition in order to wrest the district from Republican control.

Then there are other very interesting campaigns now on in Mrs. Mountz's home county, principally for members of the Legislature and county chairman, so that she will have plenty of outlet for all her political energies. Some of her friends have advocated her running for alternate delegate from this Congressional district, but she has declined to enter the race, though there is one vacancy that has not yet been pre-empted.

Mrs. Mountz, though regarded as a strong political power in the central part of the state, is harboring no feeling of illwill against State Chairman W. L. Mellon because he said "No" to her request to be placed on the slate of delegates-at-large. The state chairman made it plain to her when he refused her request that it was only because of certain contingencies in the party organization that made it absolutely necessary to locate the delegates from other parts of the state. Mrs. Mountz, who has been active enough in politics the past few years to recognize such conditions, is in agreement with Mellon's stand.

Honored

ALDERMAN—

Friends of Dr. Charles B. Qualley, newly-elected alderman of the Fourth Ward, numbering more than 1,000, will attend the testimonial dinner to be given in his honor Thursday in the William Penn Hotel. Senator James J. Coyne is honorary chairman of the banquet committee.

Lindbergh Prepares for Non-Stop St. Louis Flight

$500,000 Still Seized In Raid at Detroit

DETROIT, Feb. 11.—(INS)—Activities of rum runners and bootleggers were dealt a severe blow today when federal agents raided a $500,000 illicit alcohol plant on the fourth floor of the Twelfth street terminal warehouse. Four men were arrested.

In addition to the plant, the federal agents confiscated 34 fermenting vats, each of 3,000 gallons capacity, and $50,000 worth of delivery and shipping equipment.

MISSION ENDED, HE PLANS LONG REST IN WOODS

Day at Havana Is Filled With Many Formal Functions; Will Take Off Monday.

HAVANA, Feb. 11.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh today turned his attention towards his non-stop flight to St. Louis and rest and quiet.

Lindbergh has been away from home many weeks, has visited 15 Latin-American countries and the return to the United States will mean liberty from ceremonies, formalities, functions and state occasions that have been tendered him in the last few weeks.

Shortly after he returns to St. Louis he plans to go into the Michigan woods for a rest.

He has stood up well under the strain, but he feels he needs a rest and after the non-stop flight to St. Louis, which begins Monday at dawn, he will retire temporarily from the public admiration.

Lindbergh, although only 26 years of age, handled himself like a veteran diplomat, winning the love and affections of all Latin-America by his simplicity and earnestness. Not once has he faltered. Not once has he made a mistake that might have caused official hands to be raised in horror.

His mission has been fulfilled. He has carried a realization of friendliness with him wherever he has gone.

And he is carrying back with him to the United States, an equal realization from the republics which he has visited.

Today his program was even more difficult. At 9 o'clock he flew over the city with prominent Cuban officials in a commercial plane. At noon he attended a luncheon given by the American Chamber of Commerce. At 4 o'clock he greeted veterans of the Spanish-American and World wars at a reception at the American embassy. In the evening he attended a reception given by the Cuban Geographical Society.

Sunday will be a day of rest. Monday he starts home.

Theta Tau Picks New Regent

Edwin B. Ross, 3397 Bigelow boulevard, a junior in the department of commercial engineering, has been elected regent of Theta Tau, national engineering professional fraternity. Other Pittsburgh district students chosen for office are: Stewart C. Ralston, Oakmont, junior in commercial engineering, scribe; William J. Murdoch, Sewickley, junior in civil engineering, inner guard, and James G. Kuester, Avalon, junior in commercial engineering, outer guard.

Fort Tompkins Fire Routs Sleeping Men

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(INS.)—Three hundred soldiers were routed from their slumbers early today when fire swept through Fort Tompkins, Staten Island, an ancient stone fortification in which four companies, comprising the Third Battalion of the Sixteenth Infantry, have been quartered.

The fire started in the supply room and quickly spread to the soldiers' sleeping quarters. Damage has not been estimated.

Agricultural Men Meet in Beaver Falls

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Feb. 11.—The annual convention of the Beaver County Agricultural Association was held today in the Brodhead Hotel. After Burgess Will Levis welcomed the members, Dr. Charles G. Jordan, Harrisburg, secretary of agriculture, made the principal address.

Waits 15 Years to Eat Fried Onions

"After 15 years I eat anything I want—even fried onions. Adlerika ended sour stomach and gas and I enjoy life again."—Mrs. L. Branton.

The simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, saline, etc. (known as Adlerika), has a most surprising DOUBLE action. First, it acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel (most medicines act on lower bowel only) and removes foul matter that often poisoned the system for months. Second, Adlerika clears all GAS and sourness from stomach and bowels, bringing INSTANT relief from stomach trouble. And in addition, Adlerika removes metabolic poisons which cause neuritis, rheumatism, etc.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, writes: "Adlerika, in addition to its intestinal cleansing, checks the growth of intestinal bacteria and bacilli."

Dr. J. Weaver: "In my 50 years' practice, I have found nothing to excel Adlerika."

J. E. Puckett: "After using Adlerika, I feel better than for 20 years. Awful impurities were eliminated."

It will astonish you the great amounts of poisonous matter Adlerika brings out—matter you would never believe was in your system. In chronic constipation, gas bloating, sour stomach and sick headache, just ONE spoonful Adlerika brings wonderful relief. At leading druggists. Sold in Pittsburgh by May Drug Co. and other druggists.

Nervous Folks Need This New Discovery

May Drug Co. Offers Lifetone Tablets to Build Up "Shot to Pieces" Nerves or Money Back.

Knowing that your unhappy condition is caused by nerves you can't control, what are you going to do about it?

Are you going around with that repressed and gloomy look, avoiding contact with friends; letting the world know that nervousness is getting the best of you—is robbing you of your health—your energy—your vitality?

Or are you going to do something to get rid of this nervous condition? Have you "lost your nerve" entirely, or are you going to look the facts in the face and start today to become a real energetic, useful man again?

No matter what put you in such a nervous condition, remember that Lifetone Tablets are compounded for the sole purpose of helping nervous men and women and if for any reason they do not help you to get rid of all nervousness and at the same time cause you to grow more vigorous in body and keener in mind, May Drug Co. or any live wire druggist anywhere will gladly return the purchase price.

Seventy-two tablets for $1.00—not much to pay for steady nerves and bright eyes and a buoyant feeling all day long.

Deputy

IN CHARGE— William Earl Rapp, district deputy of the Eighty-sixth district of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, is in charge of an entertainment which Good Cheer Council, No. 96, will hold in the Allentown Turner Hall Friday in honor of national officers of the order.

MARK DEMOLAY ANNIVERSARY

The 21 combined chapters of the Order of DeMolay in Western Pennsylvania will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the institution of the order in Pennsylvania with a joint meeting at Memorial Hall, the meeting place of the first chapter, Templar, on Tuesday evening, February 21. Representatives of the sponsoring bodies, the 15 commanderies of Knights Templar in the Pittsburgh district and Pittsburgh Chapter No. 1 of the newly formed International DeMolay Alumni will also take part in the affair, which will be open to DeMolays, former DeMolays and Masons.

The principal speakers on the program are Mayor Charles H. Kline, Frank S. Land, grand scribe and founder of the order, and Warren S. Stipp, deputy for the grand council in Maryland. Ralph C. Minehart, past grand commander of the grand commandery of Pennsylvania, Knights Templar, and member of the grand council for Pennsylvania, will be master of ceremonies. The band of Lincoln chapter will furnish music; Templar, North Boroughs and Chartiers chapters will provide other forms of amusement, and the Templar DeMolay cadets will attend in uniform.

Celanese & Rayon Fabrics In a New Department
A New Second Floor Department That Will Specialize In Fabrics Woven From Celanese and Rayon

Celanese and rayon . . . alike but different . . . both resembling silk in their lustrous beauty . . . yet entirely different fibers. Celanese fabrics are washable . . . do not shrink, stretch or alter their shape, either in use or after laundering . . . they are unaffected by perspiration and do not rot or lose their natural soft "feel." New fabrics of both rayon and celanese are now being shown in new Spring patterns and colorings—in splendid variety. Among them are:

Society Belle Celanese Prints, 40 inches wide, yard $1.49.
40-inch Celanese Crepe in new printed designs, $2.98 yard.
40-inch Raysheen Prints, $1.49 yard.
36-inch All-Rayon Prints, $1.29 yard.
36-inch Melo-Glo (Celanese), $2.38 yard.

The New Gimbel Store — Specialists to the Home

HERE—under one roof—one will find complete new stocks of everything needed for the home. Twenty-five separate departments, each specializing on some one important phase of home furnishing, each striving to lift the standards of living by bringing within easy reach of the public not only the necessities but the luxuries of everyday life in the home. The new, fresh stocks in these departments demonstrate the Gimbel store's distinction as a power for the aesthetic, making an appreciation of Beauty readily accessible.

And this store's alertness in providing the many "tools" that Invention, Science and Art are contributing to the business of home-making, make it possible for a woman to have the joy and honor of being her own housekeeper and still retain her youth and enthusiasm for all things that will make her a wonderful wife and mother, a charming hostess and a person whose interests make life full and fascinating for herself and others.

Gimbels Semi-Annual Sale of Fine Quality Furniture

The spirit of the modern home may be defined in two words—Beauty and Refinement. To this end Gimbels have carried their ideals. In meeting your needs and wants we have selected from the products of the country's foremost manufacturers of furniture, suites and occasional pieces of many matched woods and finishes. Styles, types, periods and designs have been dealt with in a modern way, bringing this furniture up to the Gimbel standard. On the two floors, the eighth and ninth, occupied by this vast display, you may select at your leisure furniture of quality.

For a taste of delightful home atmosphere, in which the very latest interior decorative effects have been carried out, we suggest a tour of Gimbels Model Home, located on the Ninth Floor.

Sesqui-Centennial Display of Rugs

Ali Akber Kiachif, emissary of the Imperial Persian Government, and rug collector of note, made possible the purchase by the Gimbel Stores, of the entire Thousand Rug display at the Sesqui-Centennial. The portion allotted to Gimbels Pittsburgh Store is now on display. There are no two alike, and each is a masterpiece. Some are undoubtedly museum pieces, and some antiques. All are characteristic of the fame of Persia's unequaled floor pieces. We have picked at random—

The Pindik

A finely-woven semi-antique, containing 600 hand-tied knots to the square inch. This rug was originally ordered by the Sultan Abdul Hamid, as a gift to his prime minister, Towfik Bey, both of whom were thrown into prison to die in the Young Turk Rebellion. It was one of the most admired pieces of the exhibit. Its size is 9x5.11 feet. Priced $3500.

Antique Kirman

A typical story-rug, possibly centuries old, depicting humans, demons, angels, prophets, on land and water. The coloring and design are magnificent. In the border is a story of Jacob and Isaac, with the angel and ram repeated in the motifs. Its size is 12.4x9.5 feet. Priced $2400.

Antique Royal Kashan

Very fine old piece with eleven borders after the Shah Abbas Type, dating back to the 18th Century. Was originally very large, but according to custom, was divided, on the death of the original owner, and distributed among his heirs. This rug is made up of two portions, perfectly matched. Size 8.8x7.4 feet. Priced $1200.

Urges "Jay Walking" Curb to Reduce Fatalities

CORONER CITES 177 KILLED BY TRAFFIC HERE

Report for Year Shows 56 Died at Illegal Crossings; Child Deaths Decrease 5%.

Better regulation of pedestrians as an essential factor in the reduction of traffic accidents is pointed out by Coroner W. J. McGregor in his annual statistical report of sudden and violent deaths investigated by his office during the year 1927. This is more clearly shown in an analysis of fatal accidents within the city limits made by the statistical department of the Better Traffic Committee, released yesterday.

During the last 12 months, 177 fatal traffic accidents took place in Pittsburgh, with private passenger cars being responsible for 61 per cent; trucks and commercial vehicles, 20 per cent; taxicabs, 12 per cent; street cars, 5 per cent; motorcycles, 1½ per cent, and railroads (at crossings), 1½ per cent.

PEDESTRIANS AT FAULT

At the same time, some of the responsibility must necessarily be placed upon the pedestrian, inasmuch as 56 fatalities occurred while pedestrians were crossing streets at points other than intersections (known as jay walking); 25 were killed playing in the streets (practically all of whom were children under 11 years of age); 25 were killed at crossings where no signal system controls traffic; eight fatalities occurred when crossing was attempted diagonally by the pedestrian; two while pedestrians disregarded the signal, while the most striking argument for adoption of a signal system is given in the fact that not a single fatality occurred while pedestrians were crossing intersections with the signals. Of the 177 fatalities, 134 were pedestrians.

Child (under 14) fatalities decreased by 5 per cent, the fatalities totaling 20, of which 12 occurred between 5 and 10 p. m. While the reduction of any type of accident is an achievement, particular reduction among children is gratifying, although in the words of Coroner McGregor, we still have strides to make in this direction. The coroner says:

"The alarming number of children from the ages of 1 to 14 would show that we are not living up to our guarantee to them that we shall protect their physical being from harm and injury and that we are not affording them the means, opportunity and occasions by which they can enjoy life. The money spent to give our children from the ages of 1 to 14 opportunity to play and enjoy the sunshine and fresh air is a paltry sum when compared to that spent for those beyond that age to enjoy the same sunshine and fresh air."

SIGNALS VIOLATED

Protection of human life is not confined solely to the pedestrian, however, for in 42 cases the view of the pedestrian was obstructed. Yet among the faults of the drivers, ascertained by injuries, were the following, turning right, 2; turning left, 13; backing, 3; skidding, 2; exceeding the speed limit, 7; on wrong side of the road, 7; cutting in, 41; passing standing street car, 3; passing on wrong side, 1; failed to signal, 1; improper turning, 5; failing to stop on signal from officer or running past signal, 1; failing to stop at through highway or street, 2; driving off roadway, 17; driving through safety zone, 1; double or prohibited parking, 1. All of these conditions are such that the drivers themselves must control.

One may frequently scoff at the ability of the female driver, yet is is a startling fact that of the 177 fatalities, not a single one was caused by a female operator. The recklessness of youth is further indicated by the statistics, which show that of 53 fatalities in automobile collisions, 22 were aged between 15 and 30 years. Sixty per cent of all accidents occurred between 3:30 p. m. and 1:30 a. m., with December and June the most dangerous months.

The total by months includes: January, 14; February, 15; March, 11; April, 11; May, 14; June, 22; July, 11; August, 11; September, 15; October, 12; November, 13, and December, 24. The hours from 5 to 6 p. m., 7 to 8 p. m. and 10 to 11 p. m. proved the most fatal of the day, as 16 fatalities occurred during each of these hours.

Spirit Code Message Sent Houdini's Wife

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Mrs. Harry Houdini, widow of the magician, believes she has received a spirit communication from his mother, who died in 1913.

A message containing the word "forgive," purporting to come from the magician's mother, was received at a spiritualist seance and this, Mrs. Houdini said, was a key word known only to herself, Houdini and his mother.

An investigation by newspapers, however, showed that in an interview published in 1927 the key-word arrangement was disclosed. Arthur Ford, the medium, said he knew nothing of any previous arrangement between Houdini and his mother.

Mrs. Houdini said she now was hopeful of hearing from her husband, who died in October, 1926. She said that prior to his death they had agreed on a code of 10 words which he would try to use to communicate with her. She said she has received hundreds of "messages" from mediums, but none of them contained the key words.

Lebanon, and for Louis W. Fink to H. D. Hughes, a two-story brick dwelling and garage on 30x110 feet in Beaconhill avenue, Dormont, for $11,000.

Murphy Brothers sold a brick house in Shady drive, Dormont, for C. J. Llewellyn to J. P. Clark at private terms, and for Paul Tobashnik to George E. Moore a brick house and two garages at 1552 Tolma avenue, Dormont.

George A. Knorr has purchased from David H. Hendrick a seven-room brick house on 33x107 feet at 1119 Dormont avenue, Dormont.

There were 435 mortgages placed on record last week amounting to $2,139,770.16, according to the report of C. C. C. Stotler, secretary of the Title Guaranty Company.

Of these 38 were purchase money mortgages amounting to $173,718.35, and 395 were straight mortgages amounting to $1,966,051.81. The straight mortgages included 152 amounting to $1,021,339.62 to corporations, 132 amounting to $545,560.00 to building and loan associations, and 111 amounting to $395,861.19 to individuals.

FIVE DAYS' TREATMENT—FREE
Just to Prove the Merits of Dr. Ellis' PRESCRIPTION 1926

Thousands of individuals know the merit of Dr. Ellis' Prescription containing the alphates and sub sulphates found in the seven mineral springs, containing fifteen elements of the body.

Physicians all over the world send their patients to mineral springs when they find their faulty elimination by the excretory organs have caused the patient to become poisoned by absorption of waste products that should have been carried out of the system.

A sluggish liver, the bile in the gall bladder becomes too viscid to flow freely, inactivity of the kidneys, lack of complete function of the intestines, although the bowels may move daily; all these symptoms indicate danger, as revealed by high blood pressure, sallow complexion, tired, worn-out feeling, pains and aches of the muscles and joints, loss of appetite, failure of the food ingested to digest and be assimilated. These are only a few of the many symptoms resulting from what physicians term "septicæmia."

Dr. Ellis' Rx 1926 contains the elements in the body as found in Seven Mineral Springs, concentrated, so that each teaspoonful is capable of eliminating the waste poison from a body weighing 125 pounds by stimulating the excretory and excretory organs, if no pathological condition exists.

If you are not 100%, your work seems too much or tired after a good night's rest, Dr. Ellis' Rx 1926 will soon show you a marked improvement and you will soon notice your complexion changing, eyes brighter, tongue no longer coated. You will get up in the morning ready for the daily toil just like an automobile acts after the carbon has been removed.

Secure a bottle of this concentrated water and take as directed for five days. Then if you feel that any claim in this notice is untrue, if you are not feel ambitious, more vigorous and keen-minded, any of our stores will cheerfully refund your full purchase price paid by returning the unused balance. Price $1.00 for large bottle.

Prohibition Agents Raid Dozen Places Downtown

SEIZE LARGE RECTIFIER IN VERSAILLES

Confiscate Stills and Whisky in Two Homes and Barn at Willock; Arrest Many.

A dozen raids on downtown stores, saloons, restaurants and lodging houses were made simultaneously Saturday afternoon by prohibition agents working under Assistant Administrator Joseph A. Frayne.

The raids were made in Grant and Water streets and in First and Second avenues. Search warrants had been obtained on previous "buys." Three of the places were reported dry, and liquor was confiscated in nine others. Some of those arrested had been caught in raids last Saturday.

Other agents made raids in Baldwin township and other sections of the city.

In a barn and two private houses at Willock, stills and moonshine whisky were reported seized, and Frank Knopler, 51; Mike Podbelski, 38, and John Subic, 40, were arrested.

Anthony J. Stugun, 30, and Joseph Stanish, 36, were arrested while alleged to have been delivering 20 gallons of moonshine whisky to a store at 1252 Ridge avenue. Two quarts of whisky were seized in the store. Mathew Gorney, 27, and Bernard Junitus, 20, were arrested at Twenty-seventh street and Liberty avenue, while transporting a 100-gallon still in an automobile.

The largest seizure of the day was at a two-story brick house at 5624 Melvin street, where agents said they seized 141 pint bottles of whisky, 65 gallons of alcohol and other alleged contraband. David Sirois, 34, was arrested. An alcohol plant, equipped with a 20-foot rectifying column, and 1,710 gallons of alcohol were seized in a house at 211 Railroad street, Versailles.

The places raided in the downtown district, the persons arrested and seizures of liquor were reported as follows:

Restaurant, 509 Grant street; Mrs. Helen Vrzinsky; a gallon of whisky and two bottles of wine.

Restaurant, 507 Grant street; Pete Floss and Mary Miller; two quarts of moonshine whisky in kitchen and a 15-gallon jug of moonshine in basement.

Lunchroom, 105 Grant street; Steve Rasko and Mary Rasko; a two-quart bottle with odor of moonshine.

Restaurant, 238 Second avenue; Steve Vargo; 15 gallons of wine and six pints of beer.

Store and lodging house, 441 First avenue; George Barth; three barrels of wine.

Restaurant, 111 Orchard street; George Pastanyi and daughter, Julia Pastanyi, 18. No liquor found.

Restaurant, 431 Water street; J. Shaffner; a 52-gallon barrel of liquor buried in basement.

Saloon and restaurant, 113 Grant street; Mike and Alex Subic; four gallons of moonshine whisky.

Restaurant, 420 First avenue; P. Nyitrai and Mrs. M. Nyitrai; 142 gallons of moonshine whisky and 95 bottles of beer.

Restaurant, 103 Grant street; Frank and Margaret Pushey. No liquor found.

Lunchroom; Louis German. Warrant issued for Nick Smaris, proprietor; a small quantity of moonshine whisky.

Restaurant, 455 Water street; William Rosenberg. No liquor found.

Award Contract for William Penn Annex

The Grange Construction Company Saturday was awarded the contract for the erection of the annex to the William Penn Hotel. The contract includes all but the foundation and the steel construction, now past the fifth story. The contract price is understood to be about $3,000,000. The annex is to be 22 stories high, of about 700 rooms, and is expected to be finished about October.

Rocky Grove to Vote on $100,000 Bond Issue

FRANKLIN, Pa., Feb. 11.—Rocky Grove will vote Tuesday on a $100,000 bond issue to provide a new sewer system in Rocky Grove, Bleakley Hill and Prospect Park.

Called

TO DORMONT—

The Rev. Edward Bleakney, pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, Utica, N. Y., has accepted the call extended to him by the Mt. Lebanon Baptist Church, Alabama avenue, Dormont. He will begin work there on March 1.

THEFT SUSPECT SOUGHT IN NAVY

Implicated by another youth in a series of South Hills robberies, John M. Ottway, 19, of the South Side, will be brought back from the navy to stand trial in Criminal Court. He was indicted by the grand jury several days ago.

Detective Inspector Clyde Eberburn Saturday wired Hampton Roads naval base for definite information as to the whereabouts of Ottway, preparatory to sending requisition papers for his return.

Ottway was implicated by John Martin, 602 Eckert street, who was held for court on a robbery charge by Magistrate A. D. Brandon in Morals Court January 16. The thefts occurred last summer and fall.

KIN FIGHT GUN DUEL; MAKE UP

In the hallway of a rooming house at 70 South Eleventh street, early Saturday, Alexander Oretti, 38, who lives there, and his cousin, Rocco Di Liberatore, 35, of 704 Sarah street fought a duel with revolvers. Oretti shot his cousin in the right shoulder and the right hand and Di Liberatore shot his foe in the back.

Then they "made up." They tossed the revolvers over the fence in the yard and walked to St. Joseph's Hospital for treatment. Police were notified and both men were arrested in their hospital beds. They are expected to recover.

According to the authorities, the cousins quarreled twice, the first fight starting in a Hill district house where they had been drinking. There, Oretti blackened one of his cousin's eyes.

SELECTED FOR STREET SURVEY

William H. Connell, former chief executive of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, and Jerry J. Freeman, chief engineer, Bureau of Specifications and Tests, Allegheny county, have been named to an "engineers' commission" to study needs for streets and highways of the future, by the National Paving Brick Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Connell has been selected chairman of the commission, other members of which are: Frederick J. Cellarius of Dayton, O., engineer, and Warren H. Neel, Georgia state highway engineer.

Old Patent Of Colonial Days Is Filed Away Here

THE copy of an old patent from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania conveying to George Sickman for the sum of three pounds and 12 shillings the 431 acres known as "Sickmanhausen," along Peters Creek in Washington county, was recorded in the Allegheny county deed registry office recently. The paper was witnessed by the Hon. Peter Muhlenberg on March 11, 1788, at which time the nation was but 12 years old. As was the custom with the old patents, the state reserved one-fifth of all the gold and silver ore on the property.

OAKLAND PLACE IS 'PADLOCKED'

A two-story frame building, with a store room, at 207 Bouquet street, was ordered "padlocked" for one year in a decree signed Saturday by Federal Judge R. M. Gibson, who declared it a common nuisance because of its use for the sale of liquors. The court said the decree would be modified if the owner filed sufficient surety against further violations.

Stanley Juskowich of Mollenauer, convicted last week of manufacturing moonshine whisky, was sentenced to serve three months in jail.

URCHIN'S TIP RESTORES BOY

"Hey, mister, don't take that kid away. He belongs around here!"

This protest by an urchin to Patrolman A. J. Lyons, Saturday afternoon, saved that officer a trip to the matron's department of Central Station with a lost boy and resulted in restoring Jack Shaw, 5, to his frantic mother, Mrs. James Shaw, 1291 Beaver avenue.

Jack, deserted by playmates, Saturday morning wandered away from home. He wound up in the drug store of H. J. Wiethorn, 1733 Beaver avenue. When no one called for the lad after several hours, Woods Run police were notified. Patrolman Lyons, about to board a street car with Jack, made a house-to-house canvass after receiving the urchin's tip and finally found Jack's home.

Confessed Girl Slayer Quakes in Fear

MOANS IN CELL AS HUNDREDS HUNT FOR BODY

Victim Hacked to Pieces, Buried, Is One Theory in Ohio Case.

By WALTER CHAMBERS,
Staff Correspondent.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O., Feb. 11.—Cowardice, or else a subtle plan to plead insanity, made a blubbering weakling of William D. Herron, 41, in the county jail today as 100 men dragged Tuscarawas River for the body of Viola May, 22, his sister-in-law, whom he is accused of having choked to death last Tuesday night.

Herron stuck to the story he told Sheriff Abe Laird and Defense Attorney Russell Bowers that, after twice attacking the girl, he choked her to death in an argument and then threw her body into the river over White Bridge above Dover.

Sheriff Laird believes Herron, despite a theory held by some that the paperhanger-butcher is shrewd enough to know that he cannot be held for murder until the body is found. This theory is responsible for the efforts of another score of workers' digging into the sandpit on the Canton-Dover road, where the first attack is alleged to have occurred.

These workers believe that Herron actually dismembered and buried the body, despite Sheriff Laird's assertion that the hatchet and ax found in Herron's automobile had not been used in the crime and that no bloody clothing belonging to the girl had been found.

While the search went on, Herron alternately ranted at newspapermen there to photograph and interview him, or moaned from the pain of self-inflicted wounds by which he had sought to kill himself after his alleged confession. Dissatisfied with the jail doctor's treatment, Herron today called his private physician to treat his wounds and a cold developed since he entered the jail. By turns he is petulant and domineering, fretting at times like a child and again jumping up and down in his cell in blind rage. He is far from a heroic figure, even for a psycopathic murderer.

Herron's wife and mother remain secluded in the attractive brick bungalow just off the New Philadelphia-Dover boulevard in which he lived. They have consistently refused to talk to newspapermen. The wife has seen Herron only once since he confessed to the murder of her sister, but continues to live with his mother and his three children by a former wife.

As for the missing girl's family, 10 miles west of New Philadelphia, in a cove in Stone Creek Valley, the bereaved mother and six younger brothers and sisters sit in a farm house kitchen waiting.

They wait in an agony of double grief, one that Viola will not come home again on week-ends and another that maybe never will they have the consolation of burying her body there in the family graveyard where for generations all the dead of the May family have gone for final rest.

For the May family is as one transplanted from the mountains of Switzerland. Here in Stone Creek Valley, John May's grandfather came and settled, and her Viola May's father has reared 12 children, taught them industry and thrift and as they reached the age of 18, started them out into their own lives in the Valley. Two of the girl's elder brothers have married Valley girls that can cook and sew, mind the cows and goats and make the cheese which every year adds to their financial independence.

It was into this community that Bill Herron, an outsider in tradition, environment and belief came five years ago to live for awhile before his wife died.

Then, when summer came, he moved back into town to resume his paper-hanging. Shortly thereafter his wife died and he went back to Stony Creek and brought Ella May to town as housekeeper and nurse for his three young children. Before his wife had been dead hardly a year they were married and now have two children.

Viola May's opposition to her sister going to keep house for Herron, her refusal to visit them after they were married until the birth of the first baby, and her repeated aversion of him repeated to Mrs. John P. Senshauser, by whom she was employed, belie Herron's charges that for four years he had been intimate with the girl he choked to death.

"He's in trouble and the poor kid isn't here to deny his charges," is what Sheriff Laird said about it.

At any rate, his wife never suspected either of them. And Viola May does not come of the stock that lives by lies.

The wife's position is a difficult one. She must forsake all family ties, the environment of childhood, girlhood friendships and love for her parents and younger brothers and sisters to stand by her husband and her own children, or else take her children and desert Herron's aged mother, his children whom she has reared and go back into the Valley to be pointed out always as "the woman of a murderer."

Note 10 Years Old Leaves Her $50,000 Legacy

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.

TEN years ago Dr. James Purcell Geppert, of Cincinnati, handed two sealed envelopes to Mrs. Bertha Woll Rocque, of Chicago, employed as a nurse, with instructions to open them upon his death. In Probate Court yesterday it was found they contained bequests to Mrs. Rocque totaling nearly $50,000.

Expressing surprise at her good fortune, she said: "I never gave the envelopes much thought. I presumed they contained instructions about his funeral. I have worked so hard all my life that I never dreamed about what I would do with so much."

Bore Dying President

LAST LIVING— Jacob J. Soles, 83, of North Versailles township, Civil War veteran, last living of the five young soldiers who bore President Lincoln from Ford's Theater, Washington, on the night of assassination, has vivid recollections of that event.

Vet Who Saw Lincoln Shot Recalls Tragedy

Jacob J. Soles, 83, of North Versailles township, last survivor of the five young Union soldiers who carried Abraham Lincoln from Ford's Theater to his deathbed in the brick house in Tenth street, Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, is still active and entertains his friends with his reminiscences of the war-time and the fateful night when Lincoln died of John Wilkes Booth's wounds.

"The war was over and four other members of Thompson's Battery C, Pennsylvania Light Artillery, and myself were given tickets by our officers to the benefit performance of 'An American Cousin' at Ford's Theater," said Mr. Soles Saturday. "I was recovering from a serious wound in the left eye, and my comrades as well as everybody in the audience was in a light-hearted humor when we crowded into the theater and cheered the arrival of the President and Mrs. Lincoln. It had been announced that Gen. Grant and other high officers of the Army would accompany Mr. Lincoln and the soldiers were anxious again to see their old commander, just back from his triumph at Appomattox.

"The play was a comedy, and the action on the stage reflected the pleasant state of mind of the audience, but in the tragedy that suddenly closed the performance nobody seems to remember what took place on the stage. A shot rang out, a woman shrieked, there was a sound of confusion in the President's box, and then we saw a man flourishing a pistol stumble across the stage. In the midst of the uproar one of the Army officers, who made his way to the box and supported the unconscious form of Lincoln, turned toward us and in a sharp command ordered us to carry the President from the theater.

"We lifted up the long frame of the President as tenderly as possible and passed to the rear of the box to the stage and thence out the stage entrance. In a narrow alley we escaped the crowd, and directed by the officers, who seemed to be the only cool-headed men in the theater, we bore Mr. Lincoln to a residence directly across the street from Ford's. No pandemonium of battle equaled the excitement of infuriated people that filled the streets of Washington. We were placed on guard in front of the house for several hours until the provost officers assumed complete control. A little while after reveille they told us the President was dead. It was one of the saddest days of my life. My four companions on that night have long since passed away."

OFFER $1,000 IN TAXI KILLING

The Green Cab Company and its employes will offer a reward of approximately $1,000 for the capture of the slayers of John G. Nesslein, Jr., taxi driver, whose bullet-riddled body was found in Bairdford road near Culmerville Thursday.

Paul L. Houston, one of the Green Cab owners, announced today that the drivers are contributing to a reward fund and that their contribution will be matched by the company. Mr. Houston expects the sum to be in the neighborhood of $1,000. Definite announcement will be made Tuesday.

Broke, Convict Asks Freedom

Attorney Homer N. Young has filed a petition in Common Pleas Court on behalf of Joseph Jerome, who lives near Natrona, for his discharge from jail, in accordance with the insolvency act. Jerome was directed to furnish a bond to insure the payment of an obligation assessed by the court as a result of a serious charge made against him. Unable to furnish the bond or pay the debt as directed, he was committed to jail and now seeks his freedom after being there for 90 days.

Rheumatism Recipe

Ex-Sergeant Paul Case, Room 118, Quincy Building, Brockton, Mass., states that while serving with the American Army in France he was given a prescription for Rheumatism and Neuritis that has produced most gratifying results in thousands of cases. He says the prescription cost him nothing, so he asks nothing for it, but will send it free to any one who writes him.—Advertisement.

Ohio Mine Strikers to Hear Brophy Friday

BELLAIRE, O., Feb. 11.—John Brophy, defeated by John L. Lewis for the presidency of United Mine Workers of America, is to speak for the miners' cause in the Eastern Ohio field next Friday, Saturday and Sunday. He will appear at Dillonvale, Blaine, Neffs and Bellaire.

There are some 1,500 needy children in the eastern mining field, according to a report filed with the National Guards' relief station.

STATE PROBE LAYS SHOOTING TO BOTH SIDES

Agitation and Discontent Declared Caused by Striking Miners; Shooter Retracts.

By International News Service.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 11.—The Governor's office today made public without comment the report of Capt. J. C. Mauk, state trooper, who investigated the recent disorders in Allegheny county mine camps under orders of the Governor.

The report is a detailed story of the investigations made by state troopers regarding the disturbance at Broughton, on February 2, the report says:

"About 3:10 p. m., about six colored employes of the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Company were walking over the Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad tracks, from the Horning Mine No. 6, where their homes are. When they arrived at the point opposite Broughton school, several shots were fired, union people claiming they were fired by colored men and unprejudiced people claim they did not see the colored men do any shooting, but the strikers were shooting at the colored men when they were going down the track toward their homes. At this time Robert Lane was shot in the right temple, but all the colored men continued on home to No. 6, Bruceton, where they lived, and the striking miners who came from their barracks after them with rifles returned."

Regarding the shooting at Bruceton, the report says that both sides were firing, but no person was injured. Mauk believes that both sides fired.

"From information received during the investigation from people that are in no way connected with the labor controversy in this locality it seems the discontent and agitation is caused by the United Mine Workers that are on strike," Mauk's report said.

The report also said that after the shooting a search was made of the non-union camps, where "several shotguns and revolvers were confiscated.

"No search was made," the report continued, "of the United Mine Workers' barracks, or of their residences, and there is no question but what they have firearms also in their possession, for they were observed with them by uninterested people."

The report also brought out that the school at Broughton did not close until 4 o'clock, the regular time, on the day of the shooting.

An investigation of statements made by Hampton Matthews, who at first claimed he was hired by coal and iron police to do the shooting, also is included in the report. Later he repudiated the statement and charged Justice of the Peace J. M. O'Rourke with threatening his life and Deputy Constable William Schneider with beating him until he agreed to their demands.

CAB DRIVER IS THUG VICTIM

H. M. Scherer, 56, Green taxicab driver, reported a daylight holdup to the police Saturday afternoon. He was driving in Colwell street at 1 o'clock when he was stopped by a Negro who entered his cab. As Scherer turned to receive directions, the Negro leveled a revolver at his head and demanded money.

When Scherer handed over a handful of change, the Negro said that was not the right kind of money and ordered Scherer to produce his bills. One $5 bill was turned over to the Negro, who alighted from the cab and fled in Colwell street, according to Scherer's report to police.

The Spring Vogue Sponsors Wash Frocks — and Here Are

Everfast Prints

"Everfast" fabrics are well known for their superior quality and are guaranteed to withstand most severe conditions of wear, washing and weather.

Everfast Printed Linen

Displays a lovely soft finish, printed in English garden effects—fruits, flowers, leaves—and in more modernistic mood. A host of brilliant colorings, many shown here for the first time..... 1.25 yd.

Everfast Printed Suiting

Though all cotton, has a "linen look" and is proving popular for less expensive frocks and for children's wear. Printed in bright clear colors—in multi-colored or one-color effects — with a wealth of patterns from which to choose..... 50c yd.

Miss Mildred Lolley of New York will wear frocks fashioned of these beautiful fabrics and will otherwise suggest their style features. In the department all this week.

SPRING SWINGS IN

With Fashion in Attendance

Spring is here—we have proof, because we saw a robin the other morning. A blithe young fellow who chirruped a most convincing Spring song!

And Spring fashions come in breezily this year. Just a bit more jaunty, a bit more free-and-easy than ever before. The Kaufmann Fashion Shops have caught the spirit of the mode, and point with pride to the new and the smart ready for your selection. You'll find Spring coats with the important cape collar. Blonde mole on black or beige coats. The new collarless tweed ensemble. And frocks have found unusual ways of turning tucks into motifs.

MILLINERY NOTES

From the Fashion Hat Shops

And Spring has breezed into the hat shops, too! Millinery direct from Paris...startling in newness. For instance, the hat sketched. The little "skull cap" of Tricot Jersey bordered in flowers...and over this a hat of baku straw from Agnes...and what grace in the sweep of the brim.

Hats of the type most popular at Palm Beach and at the Riviera...worn by women who follow Fashion as faithfully as they follow the Southern sun. The longer side introduced by Reboux...the up-over-one-eye movement of Descat...the upturned brim sponsored by both Alphonsine and Rose Valois.

Sandino Fleeing in Hills to Honduras, U. S. Hears

ARMS GONE, REBEL CHIEF QUITS FIGHT

Nicaragua Leader Last Seen in Mountains Near Jalapa, Wilbur Tells Senate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—The Navy Department has been told in reports from Nicaragua that Augustino Sandino, rebel chief, is in flight to Honduras.

A message from officers in Nicaragua received today and given to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by Secretary Wilbur declared that Sandino was practically out of ammunition and "insofar as Nicaragua is concerned he is finished and is simply trying to escape."

AMMUNITION FAILS

"Indication is, from latest reports," the message read, "that Sandino intends to reach the northern coast of Honduras. He was reported to be at La Purta, in the mountains northeast of Jalapa, on Februtry 4. There is ample evidence that all the rifles that Sandino has were procured in Nicaragua from men who failed to turn them in. Sandino's ammunition is practically gone."

On the basis of this message, Chairman Borah of the committee declared that "if this is correct the outlook is very good."

All the data relating to American intervention in Nicaragua was placed before the committee by Secretary Wilbur and a staff of naval and marine officers at the committee hearing. It showed that 12 Americans and 156 Nicaraguans have been killed since the marines went to that country.

Coolidge Gets Thrift Pajamas, 5 Flour Sacks

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11. PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has been sent a suit of pajamas in appreciation of his economy program.

The Presidential pajamas are made of five flour bags, and were sent by the women's society of the Millard Avenue Presbyterian Church. The society, expounding of thrift, sent the pajamas as an appreciation of the President's economy program.

So cleverly did the women cut the flour bags that no visible piecing was necessary. The jacket is trimmed with lavender frogs and buttons.

"It may be an unusual gift," agreed the members, "but we hope that President Coolidge will accept the gift in the spirit in which it is sent and 'choose' to wear them."

Big Chief Strongheart to Lecture at Carnegie

Chief Strongheart, descended from the Yakima Indian tribe of Custer's day, will speak this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in Carnegie Museum Lecture Hall. His subject will be "From Peace Pipe to War Trail."

Chief Strongheart was born on the Yakima Reservation 40 years ago and was raised in reservation fashion by his fellow tribesmen. He served 10 months as United States scout at the Mexican border, and was one of the first to offer his services to Col. Roosevelt for enlistment in the proposed division of overseas "Rough Riders." Strongheart has portrayed more leading Indian roles in the moving pictures than any other man in filmdom. The lecture will be made interesting by colorful costumes and pictures.

Accountancy School Banquet Saturday

Joseph A. Richardson, assistant United States district attorney, will be toastmaster at the annual banquet of the students and friends of the Pittsburgh School of Accountancy in the Union Club Saturday evening, February 18. Judge Richard W. Martin, of Common Pleas Court, will speak. The dinner is in charge of the Students' Council, of which Robert R. Geisler is president.

Accountants to Hear Poughkeepsie Man

"Humanizing Cost Data" will be the subject of a talk by Frank L. Sweetser, general manager of the Dutchess Manufacturing Company of Poughkeepsie, N. STARTS WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS

A recent dispatch says that the state of Tennessee has appropriated $45,000 to carry on the fight against that dread disease T. B. One prominent doctor says that thousands are affected but are afraid to be examined lest they discover the facts. Murrmann's Compound, a highly effective creosote compound, is recommended and its results are attested to by hundreds of people who have been afflicted and who have sent in letters of appreciation and thankfulness for its timely help. It is also good for ailing babies as it contains no alcohol or harmful drugs. Carried by leading druggists, and guaranteed to give satisfaction.

SAYS CHURCH MIGHT HAVE SAVED HER

Doris McDonald Still Loves Mate Who Must Die With Her on Canadian Gallows.

(Copyright, 1928, International News Service.)

MONTREAL, Que., Feb. 11—"If I had attended church instead of wild parties, I wouldn't be here."

Twenty-one-year-old Doris Palmer McDonald, condemned to die on a Canadian gallows, made this statement today in an exclusive interview, the first interview with a condemned person within the walls of a Canadian prison.

Talking to a reporter in the house of refuge here she revealed that the motifs that constitute her state of mind are self-reproach for her predicament, resignation to death and insistence that, with all her sins, she is innocent of murder.

She is doomed to hang with her husband, George McDonald, for the murder of a Montreal taxi driver. The date of execution has been set for March 23. They were convicted of killing the taxi driver, Abelard Bouchard, in a holdup. Doris was once a pupil in an exclusive finishing school in New York City and was accepted in exclusive social circles in Mount Vernon, N. Y.

"NOT AFRAID"

"I am not afraid to hang, if hang I must," said Doris, who is tall, slender and attractive.

Doris was greatly concerned over the charge that she was a murderess.

"I'm not guilty of murder—not that," she exclaimed. "I have written bad checks, but I haven't killed any one."

A black-cowled sister of the Order of Good Shepherd who was present at the interview interjected:

"Poor girl, she has never had a chance."

Doris spoke affectionately of her husband.

"I love him—I love him as much today as the day I married him," she said. "It isn't what a man has done, or what he may do. It's what he means to you that counts. He and I write to each other every day. He tells me of all the little things that happen in the Bordeaux jail where he is confined."

She mentioned Ruth Snyder.

"What remorse she must have felt!" she said. "But then she was guilty. She admitted it. And I'm not. No."

Her voice trembled. "No," she declared, "I'm not guilty!"

She said she wanted to thank those who were trying to do something in her behalf.

Traders Discuss New Postoffice Site

One of the principal matters of community interest discussed Friday night at the meeting of the board of governors of the East Liberty Trade Association was the location in the East End business district of the East Liberty station of the Pittsburgh postoffice. The lease on the present postoffice quarters in the Board of Trade Building, Shady avenue near Penn avenue, will expire next October.

Her Color Went Black. She Was Frightened To Death

Mrs. Waite, New Brighton, writes: "That deadly indigestion and gastritis, caused by constipation made my color go black. I was frightened to death, and I feel your laxative saved my life. I take them every night now for precaution, and do not fear an attack of constipation poisoning any more."

Sage Tea Dandy to Darken Hair

By DOROTHY LANG

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. It costs only 75 cents. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients are sold annually, says a well-known druggist, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound tonight and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

Rheumatic Pains All Gone In Five Days

McCulloch's 10 Convenient Stores Invite Every Sufferer to Try Wonder-Working Formula on Money-Back Plan.

It's hard for you to believe, perhaps—you folks who have been suffering untold agony from the dull, deadening ache that never seems to leave you—that you can get right here in Pittsburgh a remarkable remedy that will bring lasting relief to your torture.

Don't let any doubts or misgivings hold you back from accepting this generous offer that McCulloch's 10 Convenient Stores are making. You aren't risking a single thing to gain a lifetime of release from rheumatic pain, for if this wonder-working formula known as Allenrhu does not completely rid you of every twinge in 10 days, they money you paid will be returned promptly.

Remember in taking Allenrhu that while the pains and aches themselves speedily go (usually in the first day or two), you should continue its use for several days longer to help get rid of the uric acid poisoning in your system. And remember further, if after taking it for 10 days you are dissatisfied in any way your money is waiting for you.

MUSIC

Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and Mendelssohn Choir SYRIA MOSQUE

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and the Mendelssohn Choir repeated Friday night's triumph yesterday afternoon in Syria Mosque, when they performed once more Holst's Hymn of Jesus and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. If there was any change in the singing it was for the better, but very noticeable was the exceptional work of the solo quartet, Jeanette Vreeland's high voice has considerable more assurance than formerly and she sang some very trying measures. I do not recall having heard a more effective baritone in oratorio than Fraser Gange. If we are to vote on the choice for our orchestral entertainment for next year, let me urge much consideration for Henri Verbruggen and his players from Minneapolis. I feel we shall not be disappointed.

Good-Bye Corn!

Lifts Right Off—No Pain

Doesn't hurt one bit. Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers.

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the foot callouses, without soreness or irritation.

SAVING Is the Basis of All Wealth

Five Cents Saved Is Five Cents Earned!

John D. Rockefeller said that "one's success in life doesn't depend so much upon what he earns, but it is what he SAVES."

The great wealth of this country was accumulated by SAVING—cut out the GOOD-WILL CERTIFICATES each day—it will help you SAVE.

This certificate is worth five cents. Save every one from the daily paper. You can use them just like money in any Cole Service GOOD-WILL STORE as 5c on each dollar you spend.

COLE SERVICE—GOOD-WILL STORES

FIVE CENT CASH CERTIFICATE

Thousands of Dollars to Be Distributed—Get Your Share

One certificate will be accepted as 5c with each Dollar Purchase at any Cole Service Good Will Store. Look for the Good-Will Signs in the store windows. Watch your paper for the complete list of the Good Will Stores everywhere. Everything you want or need can be bought in these stores. These Certificates will help you save.

Use Your Certificates.

Cole Service Bureau, Inc., will publish One Certificate every day.

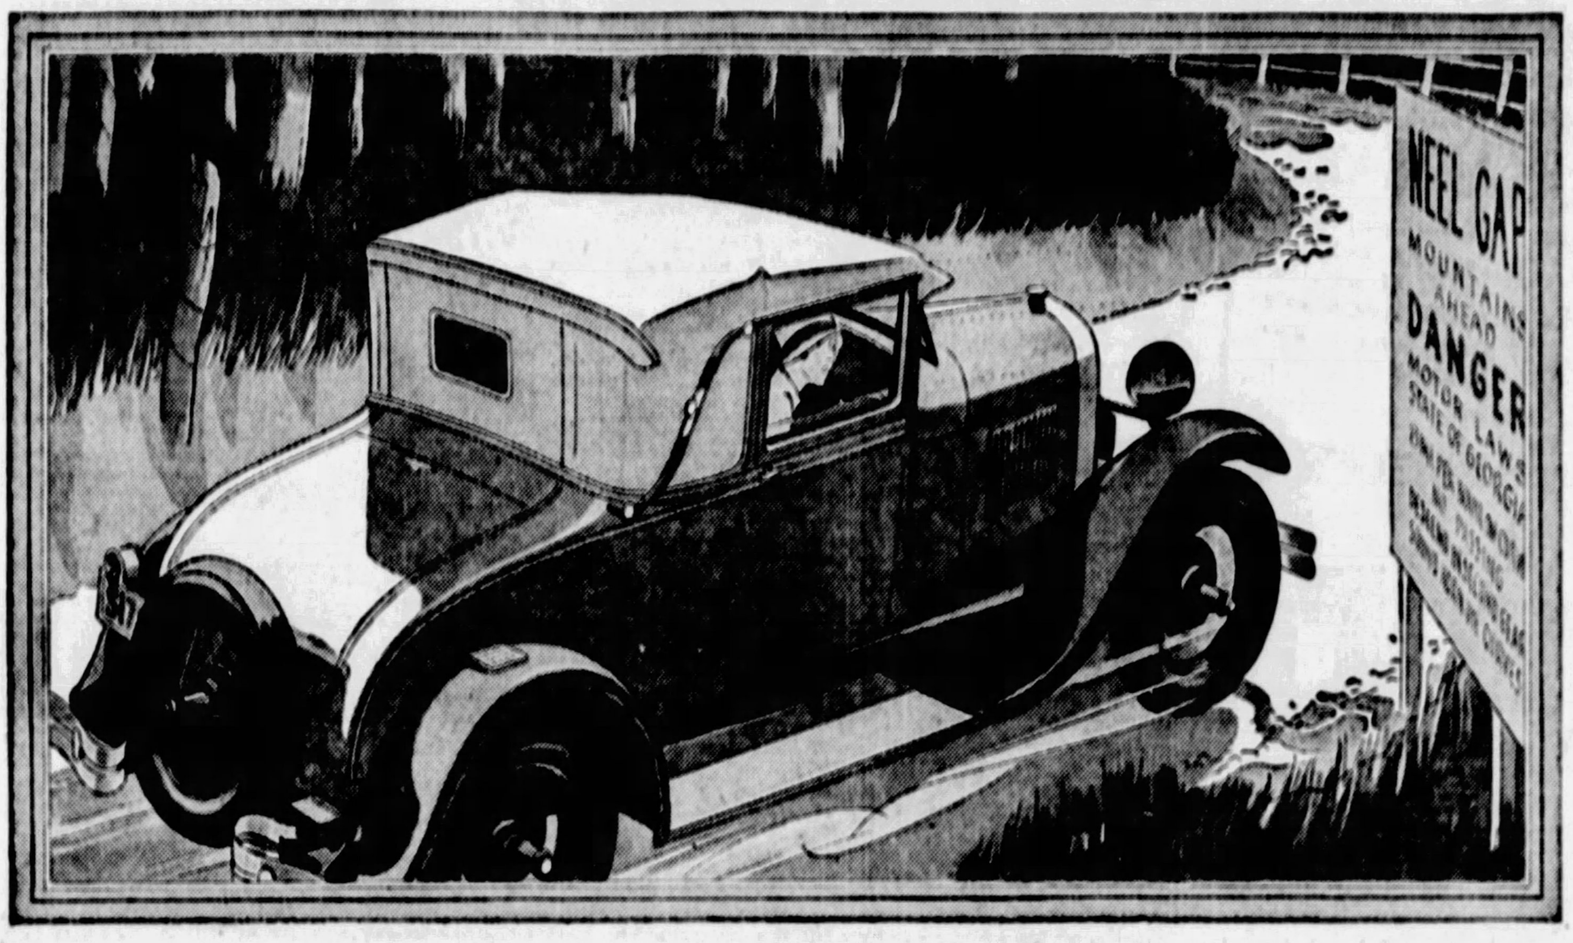
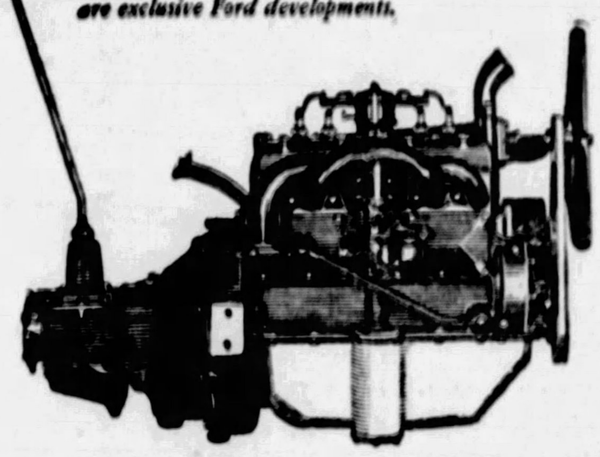
All the features of the new Ford cars are brought to you in this new Sport Coupe . . . beautiful low body lines and choice of colors . . . Ford-Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield . . . 55 to 65 miles an hour . . . 40-horse-power engine . . . remarkable acceleration . . . 20 to 30 miles per gallon of gasoline . . . Houdaille hydraulic shock absorbers . . . four-wheel brakes . . . typical Ford reliability and long life . . . low first cost and low up-keep cost.



Make it a point to see and examine this new Ford engine. Many features of it are exclusive Ford developments.



The new Ford has a remarkable engine

Development of 40 horse-power at only 2200 revolutions per minute an example of fine automobile engineering

The four-cylinder engine in the new Ford represents a new development in modern automobile engineering. It is unique in design and performance because it develops 40-brake-horsepower at only 2200 revolutions per minute.

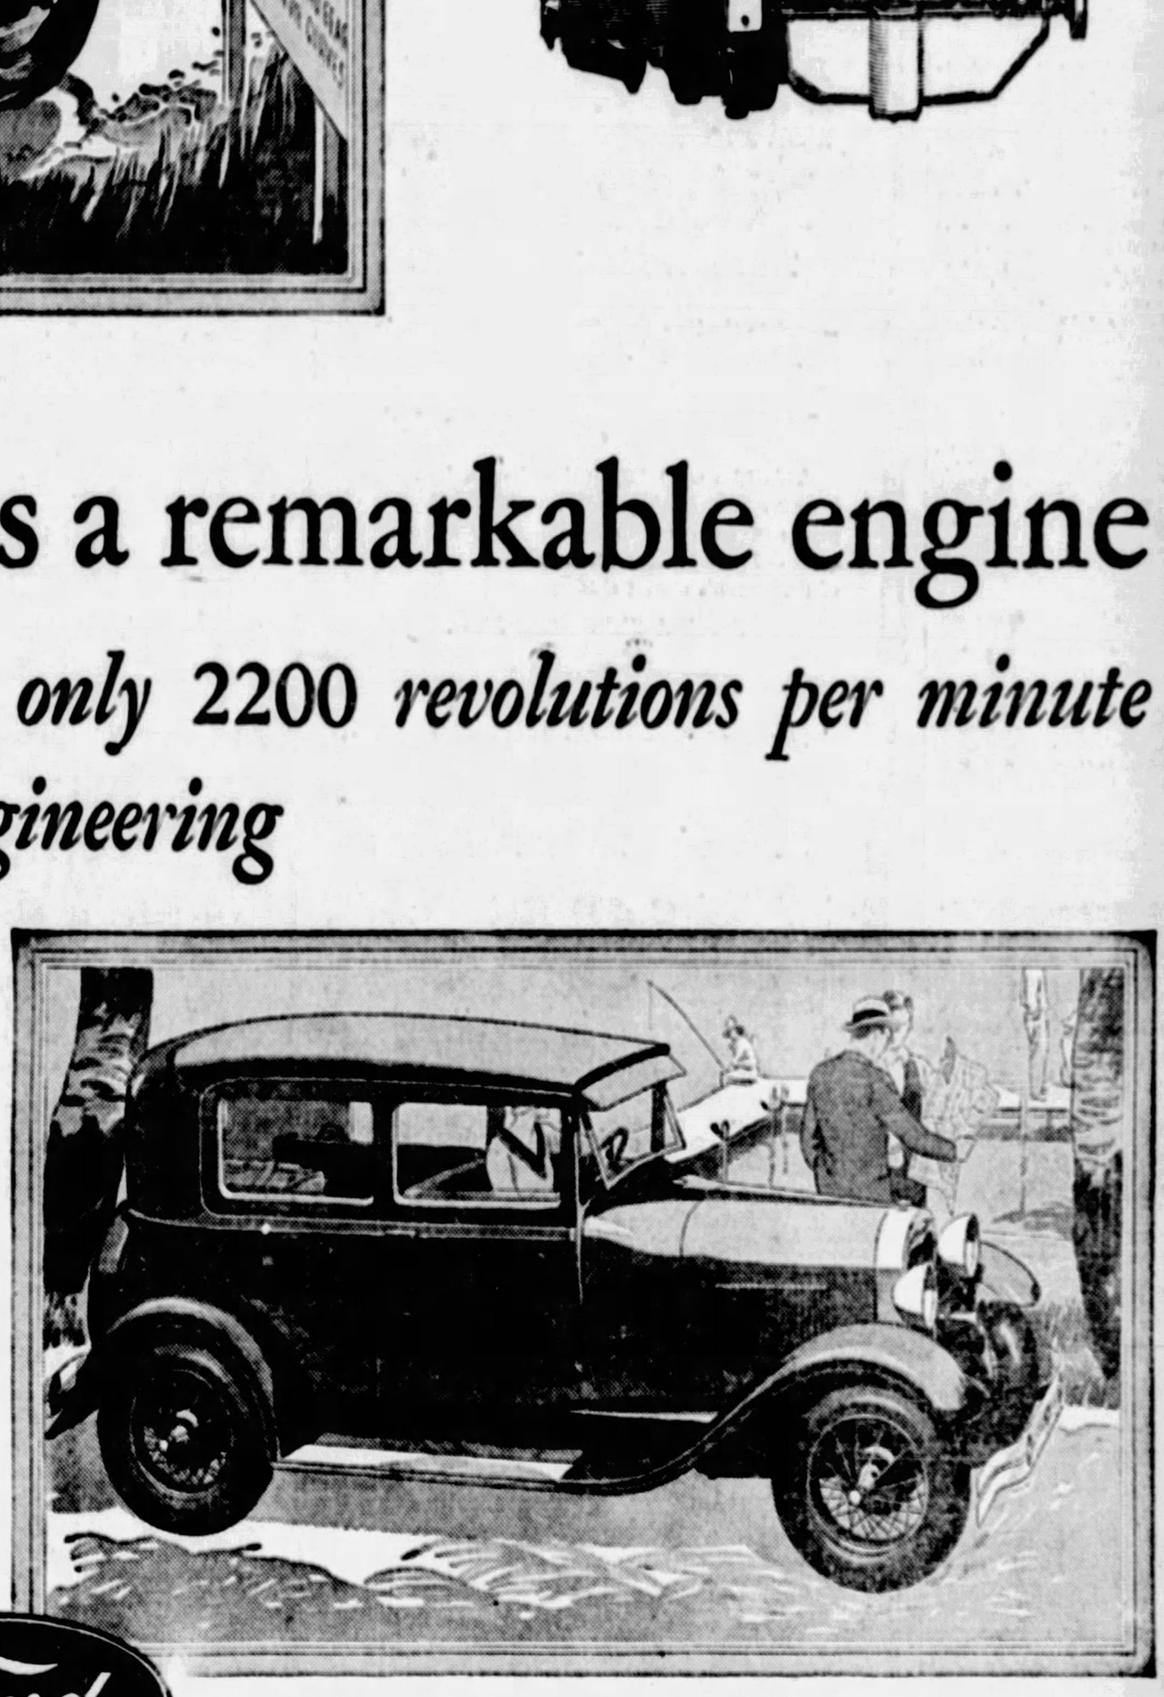
This means you can do 55 to 65 miles an hour in the new Ford and yet you do not have a high-speed motor.

The low r.p.m., or revolution speed, also means greater efficiency and longer life because the lower the speed of your engine, the less the wear on its parts.

Some of the factors which have contributed to this power are the specially designed carburetor, the new hot spot manifold, larger valve diameter, the carbon chrome nickel alloy valves which resist the oxidizing and scaling effect of hot gases, the shape of the combustion chamber which helps to insure higher compression and complete explosion of the gas, the aluminum pistons, the 63-pound fly-wheel, the heavy crankshaft which is statically and dynamically balanced, and built to withstand a twisting stress up to 60,000 inch-pounds, the five-bearing camshaft, and the newly designed exhaust system which minimizes back pressure.

The fine limits of measurement in the new Ford cars are shown in the diameter of the piston pin, which is held within three ten-thousandths of an inch (.0003). An even closer limit is maintained in the diameter of the hole into which the piston pin is fitted. Here the limit of tolerance is two ten-thousandths of an inch (.0002).

All of this may sound a bit technical, but there is nothing complicated about the engine in the new Ford. It has been designed for reliability and long life as well as speed and power. There is, in fact, no automobile engine so simple in construction as the engine in the new Ford, yet so capable and efficient in operation. "Make it better—make it simpler" has always been the policy of the Ford Motor Company. This policy has been carried forward to new heights in this new car.



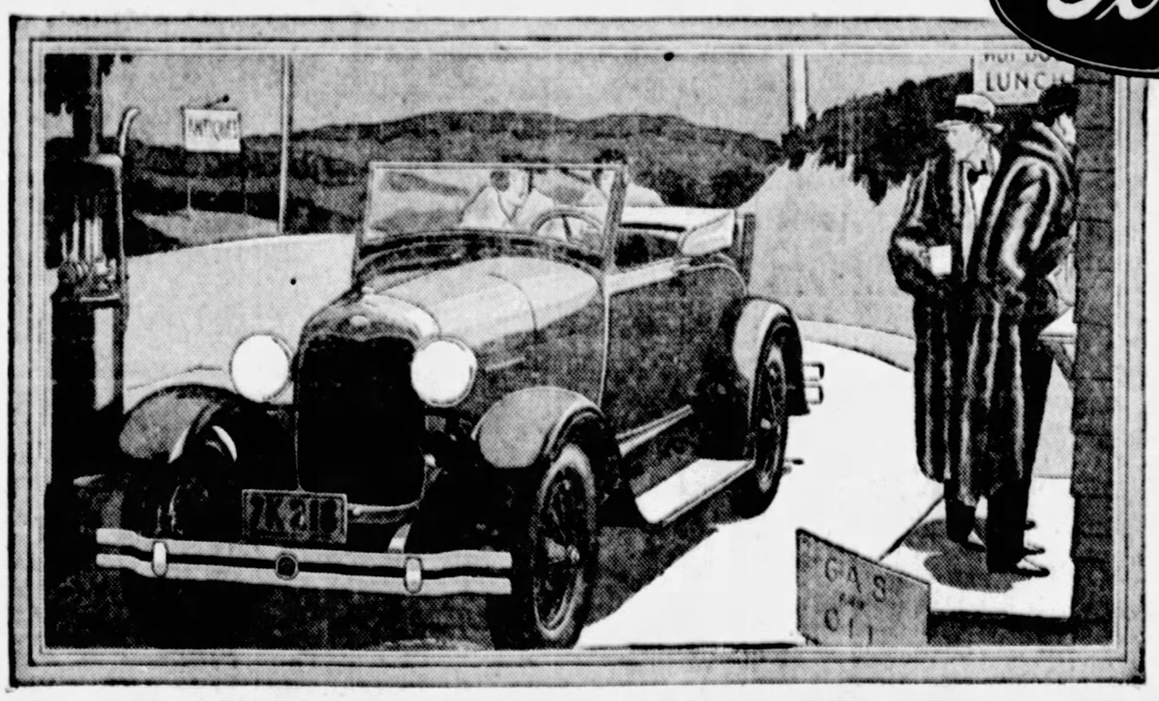
The new Ford Tudor Sedan is an exceptionally roomy car. Designed and built to accommodate five passengers in comfort. Your choice of a number of beautiful two-tone color harmonies.

A further indication of the efficiency of the engine in the new Ford is shown in its smooth, quiet running at all speeds. It is practically vibrationless, because of its low r.p.m. and the many mechanical improvements that have been built into it. To insure quiet, the timing gears are made of bakelized fabric instead of metal and the cams on the camshaft are so designed that the valve push rods follow closely, preventing valve clicking.

These are but a few of the many reasons for the speed and power of the new Ford—for its quick acceleration—for its reliability, low up-keep cost and long life—for its alert, capable performance under all conditions.

Arrange now to see this new Ford and know the thrill of driving it. You will know then that it is not just a new automobile—not just a new model—but the advanced expression of a wholly new idea in modern, economical transportation.

The Roadster sells for $385; the Phaeton for $395; the Coupe for $495; the Tudor Sedan for $495; the Sport Coupe for $550; the Fordor Sedan for $570. (Prices F. O. B. Detroit.)



The new Ford is the complete car, giving you everything you want or need in a modern automobile. Standard equipment includes five steel-spoke wheels, four 30 x 4.50 balloon tires, windshield wiper, speedometer, gasoline gage on instrument panel, dash light, mirror, combination stop and tail light, oil indicator rod, complete tool set, theft-proof coincidental lock, pressure grease gun lubrication, and Ford-Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield.

KENNELL HEADS BURY HATCHET

A harmony meeting of the factions of the Pittsburgh Kennel Club, at which the controversy over the election of a president will be ironed out, will be held February 20, it was announced Saturday.

R. F. Maloney, president of the club, who resigned January 31, has consented to reconsider his resignation, and Dr. W. H. Lehner, who was elected president at a meeting held Thursday night, is said to have made a statement that he does not consider himself president, since his election has been declared illegal due to a lack of a quorum at the meeting.

One of the matters to be determined is the time for holding the next dog show. Maloney has announced it will be held in April and Dr. Lehner is stated that there positively will not be a spring show.

CHAUTAUQUA TO DINE 2,000 HERE

The national meeting and banquet of the board of trustees of Chautauqua Institution will be held in the Italian room of the William Penn Hotel, Friday and Saturday, February 17 and 18. More than 2,000 invitations have been sent to Pittsburghers who spent a portion of last summer at the famous summer resort.

Dr. C. Wallace Petty, pastor of the First Baptist Church, will be toastmaster, and addresses will be made by Dr. George W. Gerwig, secretary of the Board of Education; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution.

Knights Templar Plan Theater Party

The Drill Battalion and Detroit Club of the Pittsburgh Commandery No. 1, Knights Templar, are working on plans for a theater party to be held on Monday evening, March 5, in the Shubert-Pitt Theater. The Knights Templar will see Catharine Cornell in "The Letter."

A general committee has been formed, G. Albert Wagner being chairman. Hugo Leidenroth is chairman of the music committee, W. C. Campbell heads the printing and refreshments committee, O. Howard Graf is treasurer and chairman of the ticket committee, and Charles Romenanyder and F. C. Bitner, cards and floor chairmen, respectively.

Diabetics

If you have the slightest symptoms of Diabetes—such as excessive thirst, inordinate hunger, with loss of weight in spite of keen appetite, with nervousness, irritability, restlessness, anxiety over trifles and loss of strength—lose no time in reading one of the most remarkable books of the day, "Is Diabetes Curable?"

It will be mailed free to anyone who will send merely name and address to Sanborn Laboratories, 2011 Sanborn Building, Battle Creek, Michigan. It describes the Sanborn home treatment and relates the experiences of men and women of national prominence who restored themselves to perfect health after other treatments had failed.

The book has 78 pages bound in board covers and is a mine of authentic information for those who are suffering from Diabetes.

Aim To Live 100

An Easy System To Follow For People Half Dead Around the Age of 40.

We only begin to think of our health when the human machine staggers and falters under a load of disease.

Millions of people who suffer needlessly from constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, liver, kidney and impure blood ailments should follow this proven advice. Go to your druggist, ask him for a box of the famous Bulgarian Herb (Blood) Tea. Here is what the tea is guaranteed to do for you. It will remove the toxic poisons from the bowels, stimulate and tone the liver, purify and cleanse the kidneys, kill off stomach gases, improve and enrich the blood—thereby putting your entire system in a first class healthy condition.

Begin right now to purify your system. Put back power and health into your blood. Take a cupful of the rich vitalizing juices of these precious herbs at least once each week. No cheating. Remember, once a week regular, that's the system. In a very short time you will begin to feel like a new person.

Further, just to break up a cold quickly and avoid "Flu" or pneumonia, Bulgarian Herb (Blood) Tea is worth ten times its small cost. Remember, see your druggist at once. Don't put it off.

DRAGON MAY JAIL JACKSON

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—The names of D. C. Stephenson, former Ku Klux Klan dragon, now serving a life term for murder, and of former Gov. Warren T. McCray, have figured prominently in Gov. Ed. Jackson's bribery trial, now in recess until Monday.

Through testimony of Stephenson and McCray the state hopes to prove its charge that Jackson and two others now awaiting trial conspired to bribe McCray when he was governor. The bribe, under the charges, was in an effort to have McCray appoint James E. McDonald prosecutor of Marion county. Stephenson, although not indicted, was a member of the conspiracy, the state avers.

Eleven jurors remained in the jury box at adjournment Friday. A twelfth juror had been all but accepted just before the close of court, but a last minute appeal by the talesman that he be excused because of three infected teeth that needed immediate attention broke up the combination.

CREDIT MEN ADD 100 TO ROSTER

Nearly one-half of the 200 new members being sought for by the Credit Association of Western Pennsylvania have been obtained, according to L. I. MacQueen, executive manager. The proposed "mental" building to cost $2,000,000 to be represented by that gain is, therefore, nearly half erected. Each new member obtained is given a business valuation of $10,000 represented in increased efficiency in the handling of credits.

The Western Pennsylvania body will have two speakers and a presiding officer at the eleventh annual conference of the Pennsylvania State Conference of Credit Men to be held in Harrisburg February 17 and 18. These include W. H. Sanner and Attorney L. S. Levin, the former from Johnstown and the latter, Pittsburgh, and Robert T. Graham, of Pittsburgh, a national director, who will preside at one of the sessions.

Mercator's to Give Carnival to "Rivals"

The Mercator Club will be host to nine other co-operative clubs at a carnival to be held Thursday noon in the banquet room of the Fort Pitt Hotel. Each club represented will present a surprise stunt. The guest clubs are the Lions Club, American Legion, Rotary, Optimist, Amicus, Monarch, Co-operative, Kiwanis and Aero clubs.

OFFICER'S HAT FOUND; POINTS TO STRUGGLE

Volunteer Searchers Out; Letters 'Tell' Where Bodies May Be Found.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—A hat found on the road near Maple Point, two and one-half miles east of Lafayette, was brought here today and identified as that worn by J. P. Groves, one of the deputy sheriffs who with two prisoners disappeared Tuesday while en route by automobile to the Pendleton, Ind., State Reformatory. The hat bore initials J. P. G.

A belt from a corduroy coat, supposed to have belonged to John Burns, one of the prisoners, also was picked up near Maple Point.

Finding of the hat and belt caused officials to believe that Burns and Samuel Baxter, each of whom were sentenced to five to 21 years for robbery, began a struggle for freedom immediately after Groves and Deputy Wallace McClure started with them for Pendleton. No definite word has been received concerning the quartet since their departure early Tuesday.

SEARCHERS OUT

A squad of volunteer searchers left Lafayette today for Attica and vicinity to investigate information contained in a second anonymous letter received by Sheriff C. N. Johnston.

The letter, printed in lead pencil, read:

"Go to the first barn south on the east side of the paved road between Attica and Rob Roy and go to the mow."

The letter was unsigned and the postmark showed it had been mailed yesterday on a Wabash Railroad train bound from St. Louis to Detroit.

The sheriff of Warren county said today he had searched all barns and outbuildings in the vicinity mentioned in the letter without finding any trace of the missing deputies.

Attica is about 20 miles southwest of Lafayette, or about half way between Lafayette and Danville, Ill., where Burns and his companion are said to have visited relatives Tuesday afternoon.

Early yesterday Sheriff Johnston received a letter postmarked Marion, Ind. The missive, unsigned, said the bodies of the deputies would be found in a quarry at Kokomo, Ind. Search of quarries in the vicinity of Kokomo, however, failed to reveal any trace of the missing men.

Carnegie Enrollment In '28 Sets New Record

In spite of the withdrawal of certain part-time and Saturday morning courses this year, the present enrollment of students in all classes of the Carnegie Institute of Technology is larger than the registration of a year ago by 190 students, it was reported yesterday. According to the report, the total enrollment this year is now 6,695.

Gains are recorded in registration in the regular day courses and in the night courses. Including the new freshmen who entered at midyear, the day enrollment is now 2,474, as compared to 2,421 in 1927. Enrollment by colleges in the day registration is as follows: College of engineering, 511; college of fine arts, 659; college of industries, 852; Margaret Morrison Carnegie College, 516; freshmen in the colleges of engineering and industries, 344.

The increase in night student enrollment is 141, with 2,784 registered this year. This figure, it is reported, sets a new record in night student registration. The college of industries, with 1,424 students, leads in the night enrollment; the college of engineering, with 853 is second, and the college of fine arts has 507.

Part-time classes shows a decrease this year with 297 enrolled at present, compared to 351 for a year ago.

Courses in architecture offered for high school students on Saturday mornings were withdrawn this year, causing a decrease, according to the report.

HAVE 'KIDNEYS EXAMINED BY YOUR DOCTOR

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

FINANCIAL Local Securities MARKETS

PLATE GLASS, BLAW KNOX TAKE SPURTS

Strong Upward Movements In Shares of Both Feature Of Local Stock Market.

A strong upward movement in Blaw Knox Steel and a wide rally in Pittsburgh Plate Glass were the notable trading incidents on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange during the week. In other quarters the market was dull and narrow, with the exception of the bank division, where two issues scored large gains.

The upturn in Blaw Knox was devoid of the sensational trading spurts noted on its last previous advance, when it was carried to 111¾ in anticipation of a melon, which later was forthcoming in the form of a 10 per cent stock dividend. Last week's high price represented a new top for the shares, calculating the stock dividend on the basis of 100 for the shares at the time of its distribution. Just what occasioned the present flurry in the stock was not known, but the Street attributed part of the strength at least to expectation of a favorable earnings exhibit when the company makes public its annual statement covering 1927 operations.

CURRENT YIELD LOW

At its present level above 100, Blaw Knox yields a very small return in cash, paying but $3 annually, a meager return even in a plentiful money market such as the present one. For this reason traders are inclined to believe that something favorable to stockholders will develop shortly and majority opinion leans to the split-up probability, while others feel that directors may raise the cash rate, possibly to a $5 basis.

The company has outstanding approximately 274,000 shares, par value $25, of stock which constitutes the entire capital. Earnings have been increasing steadily the last few years and a capital change looking to an increase in the number of shares has been regarded as a probability ever since the preferred stock was completely extinguished several months ago through redemption of the last outstanding 6,836 shares. Total authorized capital at present is $9,000,000 of the $25 par common.

Net profit for the year 1926 was $1,612,450, more than twice the net reported for 1924, and approximately $400,000 greater than 1925. The 1927 report, expected momentarily, is expected to compare favorably with that of 1926 in which case the balance sheet will probably show surplus standing at better than $2,-000,00.

PLATE GLASS SHARES

The rally in Pittsburgh Plate Glass was due principally to the improved conditions in the trade. Plants are said to be operating at near capacity and bookings are reported to be at the highest figures the trade has enjoyed for some time. In addition to the trade reports, Pittsburgh Plate was helped also by the announcement that it had joined with the Dupont interests in formation of a company to manufacture the new safety glass for automobiles and that a plant will be erected immediately at Creighton. Stock of the newly organized company will be held by the Duponts and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company.

Whether or not the local concern will resume the payment of the 5 per cent extra dividend it had been distributing for some time up to last October, is a doubtful question in the minds of most of the traders. Very little discussion of the matter has been heard recently, but it is probable that omission of the extra would not be a complete surprise. On the other hand, should the directors order the payment of the $5 in addition to the regular quarterly $2 payment, some fireworks would probably be seen in the stock. Depression throughout the industry was accepted as warranting the suspension of the extra payment last October.

Fuel issues were dull and somewhat heavy all week. A little flurry took place in Lone Star Gas early in the week, but it petered out quickly. Dixie Gas and Utilities preferred suffered a mild reaction, but regained its position easily as the lower figure attracted demand of a semi-speculative character.

The Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Cotton goods were firmer today, business continuing to show more breadth in gray cloths, wash fabrics, and other lines. Burlaps were unchanged with a steady undertone, raw silk was steady. Silk goods were more active. New lines of wool goods will be opened on Monday in men's wear departments. Reductions in knit underwear ranging from 25 to 50 cents a garment have been made by some large producers.

Dividends Declared.

American Telegraph and Cable Company, common, $1.25 quarterly, payable March 1 to record of February 29.

STEEL MILLS HEADING FOR PEAK OUTPUT

Vanes of January Production Report and Increased Unfilled Tonnage Point Up.

By B. E. V. LUTY

Indications are strong that the steel industry soon will equal or exceed its record rate of production. General circumstances point in that direction and there are two specific items in the news of the week of definite value in this connection, respectively, the report of January steel production and the unfilled tonnage increase of the Steel Corporation.

Production of Bessemer and open-hearth steel ingots in January as reported by the American Iron and Steel Institute was 3,959,-904 gross tons. With an allowance for electric and crucible ingots, not reported monthly, the January total was approximately 4,000,000 tons. This represents an increase of 25.7 per cent over the December rate. Production was above January in 1927 and below January in 1926 and 1925, being virtually equal to the average of January in the three years. The uniform experience of recent years is of further increases in February and March. While there have been variations in other months, March has run almost exactly the same in tonnage in the past four years, and in each case has been the peak month of the year. With such a good start there are strong chances that next month will make a new high record in the rate of steel production. Merely a 10 per cent increase over January would be requisite for making a new record.

TONNAGE INCREASE

The Steel Corporation's unfilled obligations increased by 302,073 tons in January, against a December increase of 518,430 tons. While the January increase was the smaller the bookings were as heavy in January as there was a large increase in shipments. There were unfilled tonnage increases in October, November and December, but this is usual, having occurred in those months every year after 1923. In January on the other hand there were decreases in both 1926 and 1927. The increase in the last four months has been 1,127,834 tons, this increase being nearly equal to a month's production at capacity.

With the precedents as to seasonal swings so plain it is a simple matter to predict heavy production of steel in March. The more interesting point is as to the maintenance of the high rate, since for four years in succession there has been a decrease in production after March. Various circumstances indicate that production will be better sustained this year, at least for a time. The Steel Corporation's unfilled tonnage position, which is better than that of one year ago, is suggestive. Also there is the point that the automobile industry is likely to reach its heaviest production later in the year than usual, and freight car buying did not begin as early this winter as last. The steel industry is practically assured of heavy production in the half year, and the second half would have to be decidedly poor to fail to improve on the second half of last year. Thus the balance of probability is that steel production in 1928 will run above that of 1927. Not a great deal would be required to enable the year to pass 1926, thus making a new high record.

PROSPECTS BETTER

With no noteworthy exception the steel consuming industries are in as good condition as a year ago, and some have better prospects. Even if the automobile industry does not justify early expectations, for it is making rather a sluggish start, it will easily do better in 1928 than in 1927. The oil and gas fields can hardly take less steel than in 1927, which was a decidedly off year for them. In fabricated structural steel the year may easily be better, in fact the average rate of lettings January 1 to date is 50 per cent above the average for the whole of last year.

The St. Louis-San Francisco has placed orders for 4,000 freight cars, making a total of about 10,000 cars ordered since the first of the year, while 15,000 were reported in December. Roads reporting to the American Railway Association retired 9,010 freight cars in December and installed only 3,655 cars, there having been scarcely any car buying for six months previous. At the end of December these roads had a total of 12,431 cars on order, of which 3,090 were in company shops, indicating that some of the car orders reported in December had not been formally entered.

Steel prices continue to show a stiffening tendency. From time to time various prices have been marked up, after engagements were made for various periods, sometimes for the whole of the present quarter. By this time there is a slight advance in actual invoice prices on shipments, but the main results of the price advancing movement will be felt in the second quarter.

The valley pig iron market remains dull. There has been very substantial activity in some other districts, the east and New England buying foundry iron freely, also the Detroit area.

Connellsville furnace coke for spot shipment has stiffened to $2.75, offerings at $2.60 having all been picked up recently. Furnaces are taking somewhat heavier deliveries.

The scrap market remains dull with prices unchanged.

Steel Prices.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Steel unchanged.

NOTES AND COMMENT

PITTSBURGH COAL

A quiet advance of about eight points in the last two days has attracted attention to Pittsburgh Coal common. In some quarters it was put forward that the move represented a probable early ending of strike difficulties, but observers looking beyond that angle attribute the move to Coal's relation to the proposed utility merger in the New York metropolitan area. A great consolidation is reported under way there, involving such properties as Consolidated Gas, the two Brooklyn utilities, Public Service of New Jersey and the big U. G. I. in Philadelphia. Interests closely identified with Coal are said to be heavily interested in the utility merger. Coal's position in the deal is that it offers an almost limitless supply of bituminous to meet the needs of the utilities over the next 50 years at least. On the last run-up in Coal, last year, its move started around 58 and ended around 75. The current advance started from the neighborhood of 49 and yesterday's close was at 55¼. The buying was quite a mystery to the Street at that time as the company's outlook from operations was anything but rosy. Various gossip of this and that railroad angling for control was heard but the best information available was that former owners had not relinquished their holdings.

CONTROL UNCHANGED

The present move in Coal common would indicate that the former controlling interest is still in control. Significance of the stock's advance closely following the latest upturn in the Eastern utilities is accepted in many quarters as confirmation of that supposition. While the combination of the gas and light properties is said to be pretty far from consummation at the moment, an item reaching the Street yesterday was seized upon as marking the first preliminary of the present campaign. This report was that the Brady holdings of Brooklyn Union and Brooklyn Edison had been taken over by the Koppers interests who represent the Pittsburgh end of the big coal deal. Official word on the reported transfer of holdings was not forthcoming but the rumor came from a source usually regarded as reliable. Failure of Pittsburgh Coal preferred to follow the move in the common did not elicit much comment. The senior stock, however, is regarded as having possibility of retirement at a not far distant date. Redemption price on the preferred is $110 in addition to which there is a dividend arrearage of about $19 a share.

DODGE BUILDING FIGURES

Total construction contracts awarded during January in the 37 states east of the Rocky Mountains amounted to $427,169,700, the F. W. Dodge Corporation reports. These states include 91 per cent of the country's construction volume. The figure was next to the largest January total on record, an increase of 11 per cent over January last year, but a decline of 11 per cent compared with December. New England, the Central West and Texas made new high records for January.

PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS

Five hundred men will be employed at new Pittsburgh Safety Glass Company plant to be erected this summer at Creighton. Exact site not yet selected, but construction will start in two months. Buildings will be near No. 1 plant of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, where plate glass for use in manufacturing of new "duplate" for General Motors cars will be obtained.

BY-PRODUCTS COKE

The By-Products Coke Company (Chicago), reports for the year ended December 31, 1927, net profits after provision for taxes and all other charges were $1,030,228. Equal after dividends paid on the preferred stock to $4.44 a share on 189,936 no-par value common shares. Compared with $1,276,901, or $6 a share in 1926. The outstanding preferred stock was redeemed at $110 a share in October 1927.

ZINC STOCKS LARGER

Stocks of zinc January 31 were 41,163 short tons against 40,751 tons on January 1, the American Zinc Institute reports. January production was 57,414 tons and shipments 51,002 tons.

NEW JERSEY ZINC

Report of New Jersey Zinc Company for year ended December 31, 1927, shows net income of $7,038,769 after depreciation, depletion, interest, Federal taxes, etc., equivalent to $14.34 a share earned on 490,816 shares of stock. This compares with $7,039,358 or $14.34 a share in 1926. Net income for quarter ended December 31, 1927, was $1,683,664 after above charges, equal to $3.43 a share, compared with $1,610,106, or $3.28 a share in preceding quarter and $2,074,100, or $4.22 a share in fourth quarter of previous year.

TRUSCON WANTS HYDRAULIC

Youngstown dispatches say Truscon Steel will strengthen its position in the Cleveland district by purchasing the Cleveland plant of Hydraulic Steel Company to be sold at a receiver's sale shortly. Truscon has arranged to bid $1,000,000 for the property which is equipped for pressed steel fabricating.

JEWEL TEA EARNINGS UP

Jewel Tea Company, Chicago, earned $9.05 a share on the common stock in 1927 against $8.59 a share in 1926. Net profit was $1,261,391 against $1,258,052. Earnings were at the rate of $50.45 a share on the preferred stock. The year's sales were $14,532,286.

B. & O. ORDERS CAR BODIES

The Baltimore & Ohio has ordered 2,000 car bodies from Standard Steel Car Company.

BRITISH IRON-COAL FAILURE.

London cables said a receiver has been appointed for Robert Heath and Low Moor Company, Ltd., well-known iron, steel and colliery owners. The capital is £1,500,000 and the company employs 5,000 hands. The deficit to December, 1926, was £249,000.

COTTONSEED OIL REPORT

The Census Bureau places production of linters from August 1, 1927 to January 31, 1928 at 656,937 bales and shipped out 545,155 bales. Supply on hand January 31 was 157,-959 bales. Cottonseed oil received at mills for the six months totaled 4,251,507 tons. There were 3,577,438 tons of cottonseed crushed during the six months and 763,353 tons on hand at the end of January.

NATIONAL BELLAS HESS

National Bellas Hess Company, Inc., reports for the year ended December 31, 1927, net profit of $403,-999 after charges, taxes and loss from abandoned lines of merchandise, equal to $8.52 a share on the 7 per cent cumulative preferred, compared with net profit of $344,499 or $4.97 per share on the preferred in 1926.

REIS SALES DECREASE

Robert Reis & Co., and subsidiaries report for the year 1927 combined gross sales of $7,059,667 as against $7,898,053 in 1926.

COPPER STOCKS STRONG

Recently the copper stocks have been firm, largely on reports that higher prices for copper metal may be in order next week, but also because the demand for the metal is far greater than a year ago. Steel and automobile activity have been a help since the first of the year. Reports of a big merger in the copper industry have been current for several days but the rumors are vague and no particular companies are mentioned in the gossip. Anaconda's definite upward tendency has aroused discussion as to its inclusion and the strong advance in American Smelters the past few days has also piqued the traders' curiosity. Smelters, however, will benefit considerably from the reported better conditions in Mexico and the old story of a raise in the dividend rate has been revived. Smelters pays $8 a year now, its earning power is such as to warrant a higher basis should directors decide that the industry has reached the degree of stabilization the copper leaders have been working for ever since the post-war deflation.

SWITCHING TO RAILS

Some of the traders long of the industrial stocks were apparently switching into the rails yesterday. The carrier group made the best showing of the market but the scattered advances were carried out without attracting much attention. Several authorities on railroad matters express the opinion that the carriers probably have seen the worst so far as loadings and earnings are concerned and are predicting that by April much better results will be reported. For that reason they have advised against taking a short position on rail stocks at current levels. Market interests hold the view that the short interest in the rails at present is probably larger than it has been at any time in many months. It is noted that many commission houses again have adopted the policy of recommending scale accumulation of what they term the "good" rails on further reactions. Rock Island, Northern Pacific, Atchison, New York Central, Chesapeake and Ohio, Southern Pacific and Union Pacific, among others are mentioned.

OIL STOCKS DEJECTED

Oil stocks made a sorry showing again yesterday despite the declaration of the regular dividend on Atlantic Refining Friday afternoon. Weakness continued in several of the independents and Atlantic fell back two points from the price reached in the closing flurry Friday. Disappointment over the failure of Atlantic to rally on the dividend declaration added to the discouragement of holders of other oil securities. Phillips Petroleum directors are scheduled to meet shortly and the street's attention is now focused in that direction. Phillips was in new current low ground yesterday but it was fairly well supported. At the last dividend period there was considerable doubt as to whether the usual payment would be ordered but directors declared the regular 75-cent disbursement. Approach of the dividend meeting has again aroused fears as to its continuance, at least at the $3 annual rate. Oils have been the "pariahs" of the entire Coolidge market and while many traders thought they had seen their worst, their present aspect is as bad, if not worse, than at any time since the depression became acute early in 1926.

FOX FILM EXPANDING

Fox Film Corporation is negotiating for the purchase of the Finkelstein & Ruben chain of 145 theaters known as the Northwest Theater Circuit, centering in Minneapolis. It is expected the transaction will be closed soon. If consummated the purchase will increase Fox's holdings to approximately 440 theaters. The purchase carries with it a 4 per cent interest in the First National Pictures Corporation, in which Fox now has a 29 per cent interest, increasing his total holdings to about 35 per cent.

TRADE BALANCE FAVORABLE

The British Board of Trade reports imports into the United Kingdom in January totaled 100,393,000 pounds, a decrease of 13,211,000 pounds. Exports were 59,742,000 pounds, an increase of 4,229,000 pounds and re-exports totaled 10,-304,000 pounds, a gain of 445,000 pounds, compared with January, 1927.

PRAIRIE HAD POOR YEAR

Prairie Oil and Gas Company had a poor year in 1927, the forthcoming annual report being expected to show net profit of about $2,500,000, slightly more than a dollar a share, compared with profit of $13,948,367 in 1926, or $4.63 a share. The quarterly dividend was omitted last October. Lower prices for crude oil caused a sharp drop in profits.

AUTO REGISTRY EXPANSION

The rapid increase in American automobile registration is confronting the country with the necessity of greatly accelerating its good roads program, says the Union Trust Company, Cleveland. Unless this is done, serious traffic congestion may develop upon a wide scale within a few years, the bank asserts. There are now 23,000,-000 automobiles registered in this country, an average of almost one car to each family and the bank thinks registration probably will reach 30,-000,000 in less than five years. In 1924, expenditures for all highways outside of cities, were just under $60,000,000. In 1927 the country's outlay for highways was $1,350,000,000, a 22-fold increase.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH

Operating income of the Western Union Telegraph Company for 1927 was $15,132,598 against $15,297,134 in 1926. Gross revenues were $131,-771,093 against $134,461,556.

PACIFIC TELEPHONE

Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company had operating income of $11,573,221 for 1927 against $11,709,-475 the year before and gross of $82,745,131 against $84,521,253.

ELECTRIC BOND AND SHARE

Stockholders of Electric Bond and Share Company and Electric Bond and Share Securities Corporation will vote March 5 on a proposed increase in authorized capital stock; an additional 1,000,000 shares each of common and preferred of Electric Bond and Share and an increase in common stock of the Securities Corporation from 1,502,175 shares to 4,000,000.

YELLOW TRUCK STEADY

Yellow Truck and Coach common held fairly steady in the face of the passing of the preferred dividend, while the preferred shares actually scored a small gain for the day. The stocks were coupled by the General Motors offer to purchase the outstanding preferred at $52. Nothing was said in the General Motors' statement about the common. Traders evidently feel, however, that the common will derive some benefit from the General Motors offer as there was a surprisingly good demand for the junior issue around the 30 mark—and this despite the fact that Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, said in his statement that "the circumstances surrounding the present situation of Yellow Truck and Coach seem to indicate that holders of the preferred stock will be deprived of income thereon for a period of time impossible to predetermine."

NATURAL GAS DEVELOPMENT

Production of natural gas in the United States during 1928 should exceed one trillion seven hundred fifty billion cubic feet with a valuation of over $400,000,000, according to E. O. Diefenbach, vice president of G. E. Barrett & Co., specialists in securities of natural gas companies, who has just completed a survey of the conditions in that industry. In 1926, he said, the total production of natural gas was 1,-314,000,000,000 cubic feet, valued at over $350,000,000. "The rapid development of the natural gas industry in this country during the last two decades" he added, "can be seen from the fact that in 1906 the total production was only $11,-573,932,000. Consumers increased from 514,018 in 1906 to 3,500,000 in 1926."

AMERICA'S MONTE CARLO

The Cuban National Syndicate, through which John McEntee Bowman and associates launched the project of an American Monte Carlo in Havana, financing for which was recently arranged through Wall Street, has begun operations on a $25,000,000 real estate development in that city. Nearly 1,600 acres of the two and one-half miles of beach land owned by the Cuban National Syndicate is being sub-divided into sites for estates of prominent Americans and Europeans for a residential suburb to form an international winter colony in the Cuban capital.

SKYROCKETING OF GOLD DUST SETS NEW HIGH

Technical Position and Expected Closing of Reported Deal Causes Rise.

By BROADAN WALL,
Universal Service Financial Editor.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Gold Dust featured a quiet pre-holiday session on the Stock Exchange today, while the packing shares constituted the strongest group. Armour shares were turned over in greatest volume, while Standard industrials were held to fractional price range. General Motors continued to back and fill as the professionals continued pounding without success. The well-advertised run-in of shorts in the stock is now mentioned prominently in advice issued by numerous brokers, but thus far has not influenced any covering. The better demand for the rails continued and they scored further with expectation more general that earnings would show improvement toward the middle of next month. Foreign exchange was dull with European moneys holding close to Friday's final quotations. Cotton rallied further as bullish advices containing smaller crop estimates were broadcast by local operators. The grain market remained irregular with a small volume of trading.

Gold Dust skyrocketed to a new high record price. Its strength was due not alone to be beneficial technical position, but also to expectation that the deal told of here some weeks ago is nearing consummation. It provides for the acquisition of another well-known trade marked concern. Bon Ami followed to a new high record. Strength of the packing shares reflects the improved earnings prospect of practically all companies, but is most influenced by expectation that official announcement of settlement of the South American price war will be made within the next week or so.

TOBACCO AT NEW HIGH

Tobacco products registered a new high record coincident with report that first official step in dissolution would take the form of an offer from the company of $125 a share for the "A" stock. Other tobacco shares remained strong. Steel common and most of the independents were fractionally lower although news from the steel centers remained highly favorable. Montgomery Ward moved a fraction higher although it had to absorb heavy profit-taking following advice from those who were first bullish on the stock to the effect that while the outlook was promising for the long pull the stock did not appear an "outstanding bargain" for the time being.

The bank statement issued after the close presented an interesting study for the speculative community. Despite the calling of loans early in the week it showed another actual deficit of $18,100,000 and an average reserve of $5,964,340. Ordinarily this would mean further calling of loans prior to the adjustment as of Tuesday's close. Instead of such corrective activity stretching over two days of business it will all have to be taken care of Tuesday and is likely to result in a temporary higher call rate. The deficit was shown despite the drop of $60,873,000 in loans and apparently is reflection of the reserve banks open market operations which are carried on to tone down stock speculation.

Clearings Show Reserve Increase

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—The actual condition of clearing house banks and trust companies for the week shows a deficit in reserve of $18,100,310. This is an increase in reserve of $2,183,320 compared with the week before when a deficit in reserve of $20,283,640 was reported. The detailed statement follows:

AUTO INDUSTRY, STEEL TRADE FORGE AHEAD

Price Structures in Both Branches Strong, With Production on Increase.

By W. S. COUSINS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Leading the revival in American industry and business this year, the steel and motor car industries have forged ahead since the turn of the year, with increases of all the way from 10 to 50 per cent in operations of specific plants.

On the whole, the price structures of both the steel and motor industries have been strong. The steel producers have been able to put through an increase of a dollar a ton in prices of manufactured steel, with the promise of a further advance in second quarter deliveries.

Most of the price-cutting in the motor car industry was completed before the motor show in the first part of January, but a few of the well-known manufacturers have found it necessary to make additional price concessions in order to "move" their cars in consumers' channels. These manufacturers realize that severe competition will pave the road to distribution of their cars this year, and that the margin of profit will be proportionately smaller. From the car-owners' standpoint, it means that a more desirable and more substantial machine has been made available at a cost from $200 to $800 lower than the price scale of a few years ago.

PRODUCTION INCREASES

After reaching in December the lowest level in five years, automobile production in the United States is now increasing rapidly, and statistical experts tell us that there is sufficient buying power just ahead to insure the continuance of the higher production rate until well into the spring.

The United States Steel Corporation is operating at close to 80 per cent of capacity, compared with slightly under 60 per cent in mid-December. The so-called independents in the steel producing industry are working at close to 80 per cent of their capacity and the average for the whole industry is 82 per cent, a gain of 20 per cent in two months.

If the steel companies are able to put through another increase in prices to apply to the second quarter of the year, they will have placed the industry in the best position for money-making since the latter part of 1925.

Once again it must be said that the first month of the new year, or even the first two months, do not always provide an accurate or a reliable chart of the course of business for the year. This period, however, does reveal the plans and policies of many of the pace-setting industries and enterprises of the country as formulated, or held over from the preceding year or years. Co-operative effort is such a large factor in American business that the thousands of smaller enterprises are wholly dependent on the big consumers for their business.

UNIT PROFITS LOW

Though unit profits are very low, and competition exceptionally keen in the rubber and tire business, the next six months promise to be quite profitable for them with a record volume of business in sight.

The railroad outlook is not as bright as it was at this time last year, and certainly there is nothing in sight on which to build a bull movement in the rail shares.

BANKS AND MONEY MARKET

Almost half of the Federal Reserve banks have advanced their rediscount rates to 4 per cent in a movement towards higher money rates which is neither understood nor approved by a large number of prominent bankers at this center.

High money rates based on the general employment of a large portion of credits in current business and industry is an entirely different matter from an artificially-produced high interest level to meet the views of the Federal Reserve Bank heads on stock speculation and stock prices.

UNSEASONABLE WEATHER PUTS CORN PRICE UP

Active Buying by Commission Houses and Speculators Swings Tide Forward.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Corn prices made a lively advance today, going to the highest level reached in many weeks. Promise of unseasonable warm weather likely to curtail the movement of corn was largely responsible for active buying which set in on the part of commission houses and speculators as well.

Closing quotations on corn were strong at 1¼c to 1⅝c net higher, with wheat ⅜c to ⅝c up, oats showing ¼c to ⅝c advance, and provisions unchanged to 15c down.

At first, the corn market tended downward, the early weather conditions prevalent being construed as auspicious for the crop movement. Subsequently, a forecast that temperatures would be somewhat above normal next week, led to persistent buying, which toward the last included the execution of numerous standing orders to stop losses at various fixed limits. Under such circumstances the surplus offerings in the corn pit disappeared at a rapid rate and the close was at virtually the day's top figures.

On today's price advances in the corn market, profit-taking sales were rather free at times but nevertheless the gains were tightly held as a rule and the advance for the week ranged from 4c to 4⅝c a bushel. Aggressiveness shown by bull leaders in the late dealings today proved to be especially disconcerting to scalpers who in earlier hours had been on the selling side expecting that the week end with a holiday ahead would witness heavy realizing on what the scalpers mistakenly judged to be an over-bought market.

Wheat and oats ascended with corn and as a result of some buying of cash wheat here for outside mills. Prices for March delivery of wheat showed an inclination to gain as compared with May and in this connection a good deal of stress was laid on the high quality of domestic wheat stocks, the present smallness of winter wheat arrivals, indications of better flour business, and the firmness of holders in refusing to shade prices for exporters.

Provisions averaged lower, sympathizing with hog values but there was some buying later on account of corn strength.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Although the disinclination of speculative operations to maintain an active position over the holiday period had a retarding influence for a short period at today's opening on the curb exchange, there was a pronounced broadening of interest in the later trading. The buying was disturbed over a long list of stocks but the extremely wide movements were limited to few issues.

Aluminum shares, Swift International and several mining issues displayed early strength. St. Paul issues were inclined to yield on small offerings and Pittsburgh Lake Erie dropped to the year's low on a fractional decline. Itancitaly Corporation opened up 1¼ points, but failed to hold the advance on subsequent trading.

Public utility shares produced some strong spots under the impressive buying in American Superpower "A" and "B" certificates.

Oils improved in the last hour, with Standard Oil of Indiana recovering 1¼ points, selling above 78.

COTTON STEADY AT ADVANCES

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—A continuation of the recent buying movement was reflected by a further advance in the cotton market today. May contracts sold up to 18.23c, a net advance of 15 points and an advance of 117 points from the recent low level, and closed at 18.17c, the general market closing very steady, at net advances of 6 to 14 points.

The market opened steady at an advance of 2 to 3 points and soon showed net gains of 10 to 15 points on overnight buying orders and buying attributed to Liverpool and the Continent. The advance met a good deal of week-end realizing promoted by the proximity of the holiday here on Monday. There also may have been a little selling on a bearish interpretation of the cotton cloth statistics for January.

Offerings were absorbed on a reaction of 10 or 15 points, and the market steadied up again on a continuation of the recent demand. This buying probably found additional encouragement in reports of a better tone in the cotton goods market and of continued steady spot situation in the South. Failure of weather advices to show rains in West Texas also was a sustaining factor, and closing prices were within a few points of the best.

The standard cotton cloth statistics showed an increase of 8.1 per cent in stocks during January and a decrease of 18.8 per cent in the yardage of unfilled orders for the month. These figures appeared to be without much immediate effect on the market, however, and the opinion was expressed by some local traders that they had been discounted by unfavorable trade reports during January.

Liverpool made a relatively easy showing, private cables attributing the failure to meet yesterday's advance in New York to realizing, which had supplied further covering, London and continental buying. There was an improved demand for cotton cloths from India, but sales were unimportant, with many offers unworkable.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 95,000 bales, against 178,000 last year.

Spot, 18.55c. Prices reported by A. E. Masten & Co.:

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—The cotton market was higher today on a continuation of the recent buying movement which appeared to be promoted by the reports of a better tone in the cotton goods situation and steadier spot markets in the South. May contracts sold up to 18.23c and October to 18.10c, making new high ground for the movement and net advances of 15 to 18 points on the active positions. The close was a few points off from the best under realizing, but the tone was very steady with last prices showing net advances of 6 to 14 points.

Prices Steady in Wholesale Markets

32 ADVANCES, 44 DECLINES

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Fairly steady price conditions featured the wholesale markets for the commodities of major consumption this week, 44 declines in the list of quotations collected by Dun's Review contrasting with 32 advances. In last week's compilation there were 31 increases and 30 reductions. In a similar comparison for the corresponding week a year ago 29 out of 52 alterations were in a downward direction.

FOOD INDEX LOWER

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Bradstreet's Food Index number for this week is $3.30 as compared with $3.33 last week, $3.34 two weeks ago, and $3.51 for the week ending February 10, 1927. This week's number shows a decrease of nine-tenths of 1 per cent from last week and of 6 per cent from the like week a year ago. Of 83 commodities of all kinds, 15 advanced as compared with last week, 18 declined, and 50 remained unchanged, as follows:

Increased—Wheat (red), corn, oats, rye flour, corn flour, peas, potatoes, beeves, hogs, sheep, lambs, cotton, wool (fine comb), wool (half-blood comb), steel scrap (Pittsburgh).

Decreased—Wheat (spring), barley, pork (mess), ribs (salted), ribs (smoked), tallow, lard, butter, sugar (raw), cottonseed oil, eggs, oleo oil, hay, copper, lead, antimony, tin, rubber.

Unchanged—Flour, hams, cheese, sugar (refined), coffee, tea, tapioca, beans, apples, peanuts, rice, molasses, raisins, currants, prunes, lemons, hops (Pacific), hops (New York), condensed milk, evaporated milk, macaroni, print cloths, gray goods, brown sheetings, ginghams, linseed oil, kerosene, petroleum (crude), gasoline, hides, pig iron (basic), pig iron (Bessemer), pig iron (southern), steel billets (Bessemer), steel billets (open hearth), steel rails, steel bars, car wheels (old, Philadelphia), car wheels (old, Chicago) steel scrap (Chicago), cast iron (Chicago), wire nails, tinplates, coke, spelter, yellow pine, West Virginia spruce, Douglas fir, alcohol.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Only moderate activity was recorded in the bond market today, and prices showed considerable irregularity. With new issues totaling about $149,000,000, following an aggregate last week of $202,000,000 traders were cautious about extending their commitments, while many of them were marking time until after the holiday recess.

A few bonds which ordinarily are inactive stood out with rather sharp gains. Remington Rand 5½s, Long Island 5s, and New Jersey Junction 4s had gains of 1 to 2 points. Announcement that Joseph B. Kennedy, president of F. B. O. Pictures Corporation, had become associated with Pathe Exchange resulted in a moderate recovery in the latter concern's 7 per cent bonds, which broke badly earlier in the week on the delay in meeting February 1 sinking fund requirements.

A few active railway issues, such as Denver and Rio Grande Western 4s, Chicago Great Western 4s and Southern Railway 6½s, changed hands in rather large amounts around yesterday's closing levels. Armour & Company issues were firm on large transactions.

A few Italian industrial liens were prominent in the foreign group, in which prices generally were irregular.

A firm trend was followed by the United States government list, but trading was in volume.

The Sugar Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—With the refined sugar market closed there was little activity in the raw sugar market today, but the undertone was steady and prices were unchanged, with spot Cubas quoted at 4.24c, duty paid. The only sale reported was a small quantity of Philippines for February-March shipment at 4.28c, delivered to an operator, although nearby duty frees were still around 4.21c.

There was not much activity in the raw sugar futures market and price movements were narrow. There was a little covering and Cuban support early which advanced some of the active months 1 to 2 points, but liquidation and a little hedge selling, principally in M[illegible] against purchases in the spot market, supplied the demand and caused slight reactions. The close was 1 point lower to 1 point net higher. Approximate sales 13,850 tons. March closed, 2.51c; May, 2.58c; July, 2.66c; September, 2.74c; December, 2.83c; January, 2.80c.

Colds and Flu Are Hard on the Kidneys

East Butler, Pa.—"I had the influenza and it left me with bad kidneys, they were sore, congested and inactive and my back ached so that it seemed it would break in two. At times the pains would extend clear up to the back of my neck. I took medicine for my kidneys but nothing gave me any relief until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets and they so completely relieved me of all my kidney trouble and put my kidneys in such perfect working order that they have never given me any more trouble. I have never taken medicine that can compare with Dr. Pierce's Anuric. Those who have anything wrong with their kidneys, I would advise to take Anuric."—W. J. Love.

Four-Game Winning String Snapped as Montreal Sweeps Way to Victory.

Prize Ring Tactics of Visitors Factor in Downfall of Garden Skaters.

By CARL W. SHATTO.

THE Pirates' string of four straight triumphs and their record of not having suffered a defeat on the home ice since January 7 both came to an abrupt end at Duquesne Garden Saturday night as the heavyweight Montreal Maroons smashed their way to triumph by a 3-to-1 score.

This was the last appearance of the Maroons in Pittsburgh this season (or any other season, if the sale of the local club goes through), but if they never play here again it will be too soon to suit local fans. The Montreal truck-horses knocked Pittsburgh's ponies dizzy with violent and sickening body checking in

W. & J. Loses To Allegheny

MEADVILLE, Pa., Feb. 11.—The Allegheny College basketball team came from behind here tonight against Wash-Jeff College to snatch victory from almost certain defeat, thus ending a losing streak that had numbered nine straight. The score was 29 to 27. The victory was the first scored by Allegheny this season.

Wash-Jeff led at the end of the first quarter, 3 to 6, but was overtaken in the next quarter, when Allegheny outscored it, 7 to 2, to lead

One 'Phone Call Starts, Finishes Buc-Giant Trade

"THAT'S the quickest trade the Pirates ever made, and I'll bet its one of the fastest ever put over in baseball."

In this manner did Sam Dreyfuss, treasurer of the Pirates, express himself a short time after the swap of Vic Aldridge for Burleigh Grimes had been completed.

"Just one telephone call to New York and the trade was complete," concluded Dreyfuss.

Apparently the Pirates have been seeking a trade involving Aldridge for some time. Vic was not in very well with Owner Dreyfuss and Manager Bush.

Neither Grimes nor Aldridge is signed, but the Pirates figure on Grimes leaving Thursday with the first squad.

CORSAIRS GET SPITBALL ACE FROM GIANTS IN EVEN SWAP

No Cash Involved, Dreyfuss Says in Announcing Exchange of Pitchers.

Both Hurlers Rank With Game's Best; Burleigh Back With "First Love."

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.

VICTOR ALDRIDGE, veteran right-hander of the Pittsburgh Pirates, has been traded for Pitcher Burleigh Grimes, of the New York Giants, according to an announcement made Saturday night by Sam Dreyfuss, treasurer of the local club. The deal was a straight player transaction, no cash being involved.

Grimes, one of the few spitball pitchers still active in the major leagues, thus returns to the club where he received his baptism of big league fire in 1917. The deal comes just four days before the Pirates leave for their spring training quarters at Paso Robles, Cal. The advance squad of the Corsairs is scheduled to depart for the coast next Thursday.

The deal is the second completed by the Pirates since the close of the 1927 world series, the National League champions having traded Hazen (Kiki) Cuyler to the Chicago Cubs in exchange for Outfielder Pete Scott and Second Baseman Sparky Adams.

Both Aldridge and Grimes were reported in baseball circles as being CHOO-CHOO FOR COAST— The Pitsburgh National League champions inaugurate the 1928 season next Thursday evening when the advance squad of players will leave from the P. & L. E. Station bound for the Paso Robles (Cal.) training camp. Manager Donie Bush himself will come here to escort the first batch of athletes Coastward. Map above shows the stops that will be made en route.

ROUTING PLAYERS— Treasurer Sam Dreyfuss of the Pirates has just finished up the tough job of routing the players from their homes in various parts of the United States to the central points where they will join the first and second squads as they pass through on their way to the Coast. Maps and railroad guides are indispensable to this task.

SOCKO TO MAKE TRIP— Socko, the famous clubhouse boy of the Pirates, whose real name is Caleb McCarey, is to go to the training camp with the Pirates this year. He wanted to go last year, but was not granted permission. This time he has obtained the consent of his parents and also the club's o. k. Since the World Series of last year he has been driving a taxicab and saving his tips to finance himself on the long jaunt. Here he is seen counting up his money to determine if he has enough. The club, of course, will assume most of his expenses in return for the duties he will perform for the players. At the left is the spring schedule of the Pirates right up to the day they make their season's debut at Forbes Field in Mid-April.

Tilden Tops List; Johnston Is Not Ranked in Singles

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—Big Bill Tilden again heads the men's national singles rankings of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, the rankings made public here today revealed. Francis T. Hunter of New Rochelle, N. Y., was second with George M. Lott, Jr., the young Chicago star, in third place.

Tilden, paired with Hunter, also was given first ranking in the national men's doubles with William M. (Little Bill) Johnston and R. Norris Williams, second.

In the women's national singles division Miss Helen Wills was given top position, followed by Mrs. Molla Mallory and Mrs. A. H. Chapin, Jr., of Springfield, Mass.

The seven others of the first 10 ranking players in the national men's singles in the order named were: Manuel Alonso of Philadelphia, John Hennessey of Indianapolis, John Van Ryn of Orange, N. J.; Arnold W. Jones of Providence, R. I.; John Doeg of Santa Monica, Cal.; Lewis N. White of Austin,

TILDEN PLAN DRAWS FIRE

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—The two-team plan of William T. Tilden, 11., and Francis T. Hunter to recapture the Davis Cup precipitated a long and stormy debate in the United States Lawn Tennis Association meeting today, but eventually the association voted to present the proposition to the Davis Cup Committee.

Tilden and Hunter were forced to give ground before the resolution as presented by the latter was adopted. Julian S. Myrick, chairman of the Davis Cup Committee, led the argument opposing giving the new committee definite instructions and it was only after the resolution had been amended to read: "recommends for the consideration" that it carried.

"We are willing to follow the wishes of the committee," said Tilden, "but we are not willing to take part in both American and European zones.

GRIMES TOLD BY SUN-TELE

"That's fine—but it certainly is news to me," said Burleigh Grimes to The Sun-Telegraph late yesterday afternoon.

A short time after the Aldridge-Grimes deal had been completed The Sun-Telegraph was in touch with the spitball star over the long-distance telephone. The pitcher lives in Minerva, O., which town is a short distance from C nton.

"I just got back from hunting and I have not heard anything about it yet," continued Burleigh. "Much obliged for letting me know, and you can say for me that the swap is very pleasing.

"I got along fine with Manager McGraw and I gave him my best. I will do the same thing for the Pirates. As I now make my home in Minerva I prefer being with the Pirates."

Grimes had not yet signed a contract. He received a big salary in

CHAMPS ENGAGE PITTSBURGHERS FOR A. L. CUP

Heidelberg Is Confident of Clinching American League Laurels in Home Battle.

Local Fans Eagerly Await Result of Cup Draw in Cleveland.

By TOM BIRKS.

PLENTY of interest marks the soccer card Sunday in Western Pennsylvania, all of the leagues showing a full schedule, while the championship of the American League is at stake at Heidelberg where the green and gold cracks entertain the Pittsburgh soccer club in the feature game of the day, and one that will carry the championship of the loop should the national amateur champions win the game.

It is common knowledge that Manager Balsarini of Heidelberg, together with the officials of the club, that the amateur champions will win this game and put another championship trophy on the Hilen sideboard. Heidelberg is actively concerned in the West Penn semi-finals, meeting the Pittsburgh Internationals, and then also has the amateur cup battles to contend with.

So all things considered it is only natural that the genial Heidelberg manager wants to get the American League pennant in the bag, and that will be one thing less to worry about.

MEET GERMAN CLUB

Up at Harmarville Manager Robinson of the Whippets is making arrangements to handle the banner crowd of the season when the German Sport club visits the upriver enclosure. Robinson requests that all his players especially Pavlick, be on the job for this important game.

The ever-popular Mustard Hollow club again will be in town today, meeting the McKees Rocks eleven in the league schedule. Then for the final game in this loop the Pittsburgh Internationals will stage a local derby with Corinthians at Cooley field.

It has been many moons since the American League scheduled four games in one afternoon, but today will see all clubs in action and some real action should be on tap.

Following of the International League will see two games. Westinghouse will again visit McKees Rocks to hook up with National Tube. Coming, however, depends upon the outcome of this game, the Tubers having the gonfalon sewed up. Bradock United will meet Douglas A. C. at Yost grounds. The Chartiers schedule of games, and that should round out a well balanced soccer schedule for the day.

CUP TIES ADVANCE

This will probably be the last week that league games will take preference over cup ties. The semi-finals of the West Penn senior and junior competitions are now due. Next Saturday Pittsburgh Rovers and the German Sport Club will meet at Westinghouse High School Stadium. The following Saturday will find the national amateur champs from Heidelberg hooking up with Pittsburgh Internationals at the same enclosure in the same journey.

By that time it also is possible that the next round of the national amateur cup will be ready and that should provide more action.

In the scheduling of both senior cup ties on Saturdays the cup committee is taking a drastic step towards placing Saturday soccer on a real standard in this district in the matter of big games.

It has been proved in soccer as in other sports that games played in open fields do not pay. Past experience at Heidelberg proves that. Five thousand fans will not $200.00 and that should be taken at the Westinghouse Stadium with ease.

Then all big national games in Pittsburgh will have to be played on Saturdays. It is up to local officials to educate the crowds to attend the big games on Saturdays. Should the replay of the Ohio-Western Pennsylvania all-star game be staged it must be on a Saturday. But the writer feels that staging real competition with proper publicity will go over big.

All local soccer eyes will be turned to Cleveland today where the national amateur cup committee goes into session for the next round draw. Then outside of the draw the Harmarville-Switevale protest will have to be settled by the body.

AWAIT RESULT OF DRAW

With Heidelberg carrying the national banner, and being in a fair way to repeat and this also being Olympic year, fans in this district can be pardoned if they watch the result of that draw with more than passing interest.

It seems fate that Western Pennsylvania should occupy so much of the limelight nationally as it does with city politics. It has become quite a joke at national conventions to ask delegates from this district if there is still a division of forces here, and when the powers that be are going to patch up their quarrels.

Of course, soccer critics from this district are not so blind as to know of other fights in other jurisdictions but these fights are usually confined to their own domicile and very little gets around the country regarding the troubles.

But all of the local troubles evidently had to go to national headquarters for settlement. These troubles might have ended long ago had the national office shown any aptitude in straightening out matters, but longwinded methods that smiled of little or no decision helped the thing along.

Just why soccer does not get a court of appeal that can function in a reasonable length of time is beyond the writer. Take the case of the Pittsburgh Celtics. That appeal went to the national body many many weeks ago, but nothing has transpired, and next Saturday the German Club which benefited by the laxity on the part of local officials will play the semi-final round of the competition.

Then why has the Kerr case been dragging for so long a time? It is common knowledge that plenty has been written from this district in the case that never went through the council chamber of the West Penn. But the national body could have forced a show-down on the whole matter in jig time had it so desired. If the present body cannot transact the business the delegates to the next annual convention should be armed with plenty of data to fight out on the council floor.

SPORTING REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Preparations of Pirates to Start Thursday for Training Grounds Shows Another Baseball Season in Offing—Spring Holdouts More Numerous Than Usual—Jewish Athletes Progressing in Baseball at Last—Local Hockey Club Fooling Owner If He Planned to Sell It as Failure—Still Chance for Money Berth—Sutherland Approves Corrections in Football Rules and Tells Why—College Basketball Peak Nigh.

by JAMES J. LONG

ANOTHER baseball season is so close at hand that the first starters for the spring training grounds are booked to get away today and tomorrow, and our own Pirates are scheduled to depart next Thursday.

The Bue squad leaving Thursday will, of course, be made up of battery men. They are scheduled to reach Paso Robles on February 20, and will be joined there by the main division on February 25, the entire crew remaining until March 16, when the practice series that will lead the team gradually to the scene of the opening championship game at St. Louis on April 11 will be begun.

An ideal training program has been mapped out for this year. In being sent to camp eight days ahead of the remainder of the team the pitchers will have a chance to advance so far in their conditioning work that they will be able to put a little on the ball when the practice games begin and thus give the regulars the sort of batting practice they require—practice against real pitching.

Cub Games Help

Another helpful feature in this respect will be the series of five games with the Chicago Nationals—four in Los Angeles, March 29 to April 1, inclusive, and one in Phoenix, Ariz., on April 2. Again in that series the Corsairs will have a chance to bat against real big league pitching, and this early opportunity of training their eyes to the kind of slab work they must expect when the regular season begins ought to help them not a little in preparing for the start of the flag race.

Bush is showing his usual smartness in making these preparations for getting the Pirates in shape to step right out for a flying start when the flag chase gets under way. The flying start they made last season had much to do with their being in a position to win out by a spurt at the finish.

The only change in the original arrangements, aside from the release of Infielder Hal Rhyne to San Francisco, is that Pete Scott, obtained from the Cubs as an outfielder, is to accompany the first squad. This means that Bush expects to use Scott in the early workouts as a catcher.

It was as a receiver that Scott began his professional career. Of course, Bush needs all the catchers he can get in order to work out the 16 pitchers he will have on the grounds, including Regis Lehney, local left-hander, but it is possible that Donie is looking farther than that and wants to get a line on Pete's catching ability with a view to using him as a backstop this year instead of an outfielder.

Good Time for Test

Whether the plan works out successfully or not, the training camp will be a good place to find out just what Scott can do as a catcher. If he does not come up to requirements behind the bat, the sooner Bush can put him to work among the outfield candidates.

The release of Rhyne means only the dropping of some excess baggage and will not result in any loss of strength to the team, as Hal never measured up to big league standards anyhow, being too slow of foot and too weak with the bat to back up his fielding ability.

In one sense the departure of Rhyne will help the club, as it will assure Joe Cronin, provided he beats out Dick Bartell, George Gottlieber and Coburn Jones for the berth as first extra infielder, more of a chance to show his wares, rid himself of his overanxiousness and reach the settling-down stage—about all that is needed, with a little improvement in his running, to make him a fine ball player.

HOLD-OUTS

ONE familiar though tiresome old feature of major league baseball that is not missing this year as the various clubs prepare to start for their spring training grounds is the very much overdone business of giving publicity to the salary holdouts.

If anything, the hold-out club is bigger than ever this spring. One club alone, Brooklyn, has no fewer than 16 players remaining unsigned, one of them being Pitcher Dazzy Vance.

Apart from this list the baseball world has been flooded with daily bulletins, announcing that Waite Hoyt of the Yankees, Hack Wilson of the Cubs, Eddie Farrell of the Braves, Ike and Luke Sewell of the Indians, Carl Mays of the Reds, Burleigh Grimes, Virgil Barnes, Frank Hogan, George Harper, Jess Doyle, Bill Clarkson and Jim Faulkner of the Giants and many others have returned their contracts unsigned and are determined to remain outside the fold until their respective demands have been granted.

It's the same old story that we read or hear every spring and it has become so monotonous that the general public will welcome the time that it ceases to fill the public prints for weeks in February and March, and even extending into April.

Too Much Publicity

This business of giving the holdouts so much publicity is one of the real causes of the existing condition. For if they did not feel sure of getting a lot of free advertising in the newspapers some of the athletes who balk at signing each spring wouldn't be holdouts at all. They have every intention of accepting eventually the offers first made to them, but they like to see a fuss made over them on the sports pages before they swing into line.

Most of the other holdouts are largely the bunk, too. Some are merely faking a wild shot at the possibility of getting more money. They know that the first proposals are as much as they are worth and they are at heart willing to accept them, but they figure: "Well, it's a cinch that they won't reduce the first offer, so there's no harm in trying to get a little more. They can't do any more than refuse me."

There are others who are deliberately faking in making what is ostensibly a prolonged stand for higher salaries than were offered in their first contracts for 1928. They do not really seek more money, but are merely making a bluff because they want to escape all or part of the training trip.

There is no salary for the ball player on the spring jaunt. His pay does not begin until the first day of the pennant season. So the training tour is all work and no pay, and that doesn't catch the fancy of some of the big league players. The result is that they try to avoid it by holding out, fully intending to sign when opening day draws near.

All Sign in End

Much of this could be avoided if the balking pastimers and their clubs were given less of the publicity that has become so tiresome to the fans.

The Pittsburgh club, when it does have a holdout, makes no mention of the fact until it can no longer be kept secret, and that refusal to advertise such matters is one of the features that makes Barney Dreyfuss the most successful magnate in the country at signing his players each winter.

Players make no play for publicity here because they know they won't get any.

Possibly the Pittsburgh club, like the rest, has a couple of men who have yet to sign, but in these and all other major league cases agreements will be reached sooner or later and the players will all be in when the bell rings on April 11.

The experienced fan has come to give the hold-out notices no serious attention. He only yawns when he sees the headlines.

JEWISH STARS

THOUGH it has outstanding representatives in practically all other lines of sport, some of them ranking with the greatest stars of all time, the Jewish race, for some reason or other, has failed to get its share of boys in the spotlight of major league baseball.

That's why the probability that Andy Cohen, repurchased from Buffalo last fall, will play second base for the New York Nationals this year has caused so much discussion.

It is so unusual for a Jewish boy to win success on a major league team, as Johnny Kling, Erskine Mayer, Bennie Kauff, Sammy Bohne, Al Schacht, Moe Berg and five others did, that the chance of another's making his mark in the fast set is being looked upon as one of the most interesting features of the 1928 season.

But evidently the days of Jewish obscurity and slight representation in baseball are passing. They are breaking into the big and little leagues now in rapidly growing numbers, and, as in everything else that they take up, they are turning to the game with an earnestness and determination that cannot fail to bring the best of results.

May Have Brother Act

As a matter of fact, whereas a Jewish player was a rarity a few years ago, conditions now are such that a brother act from that race is a possibility on a big league team.

Andy Cohen of the Giants has a younger brother, Sidney, who is tipped by good judges to be the better of the two in the long run. Sidney, who is a left-hand thrower, has displayed remarkable all-around ability. As a first baseman he starred at Alabama University and in the Independent Copper League, he finished last season as an outfielder for the Wichita Falls club, Texas League and Dixie champions, and recently he was signed as a pitcher by the San Francisco club of the Pacific Coast League.

Sidney is said to be equally adept at the three positions, hits from either side of the plate and is at his best on the bases. He stands three inches taller than Andy, weighs 15 pounds more and can outrun him at any distance.

Manager McGraw of the Giants is known to be keeping an eye on the younger Cohen and it is within the bounds of possibility that the New York Nationals may present a brother act to rival that of the Waners, the Sewells, the Cooneys and the rest.

The most notable other Jewish player appearing to be headed for big league fame is Jimmy Reese, star infielder of the Pacific Coast League, who recently was purchased by the Giants, along with Lyn Lary, for a huge sum.

Outstanding Players

Of the Jewish players, past or present, who have broken into the major or minor leagues from college or the sandlots, the following are the most notable:

Catcher—Johnny Kling, formerly of the Cubs and Braves.

Pitchers—Erskine Mayer, with the Pirates, Athletics and others; Al Schacht, now a coach and Nick Altrock's partner as a baseball comedian; Gus Foreman, formerly of the White Sox; Jack Levy, ex-Giant, and Smauny Hyman, of New Haven.

First basemen — Sammy Bohne, now with Minneapolis, formerly of the Reds; Jimmy Reese, of Oakland, and Heinie Scheer, formerly of the Athletics.

Third baseman—Izzy Bandrimer, formerly of Chattanooga.

Shortstop—Moe Berg of the White Sox, who is to be converted into a catcher, and Andy Cohen, shortstop for Buffalo, but second baseman for the Giants.

Outfielders—Benny Kauff, formerly of the Giants; Sy Rosenthal, of Louisville; Joe Ronowitz, of Fort Worth; Harry Hess, of Albany; Sammy Mayer, of Pittsfield; Moxey Manuel, formerly of the White Sox, and Harry Kane, formerly of the Phillies.

And Jakie Atz, who won six straight pennants for Fort Worth in the Texas League, might be added as manager.

Pirate AND SOUTHPAW

— Fred Fussell, veteran southpaw, who was one of the most effective wrongsiders in the minor leagues last year and will get a trial with the Pirates this spring. His work played a large part in winning the Texas League flag for Wichita Falls last season and he will be groomed to be the leading left-hander of the Pirates in the coming race. Fussell formerly was in the big show with the Chicago Cubs.

HOCKEY RISE

WHETHER or not the Pittsburgh hockey club is to be sold, and the favorite winter pastime of thousands of Pittsburghers is to be taken away from them without local men who might be willing to buy being given a chance to keep the sport here will be known tomorrow when the directors of the National Hockey Association hold their monthly meeting in Toronto, Ont.

No franchise can be sold without the approval of the league directors, so it remains for the board to decide tomorrow whether Irwin Wener is to be allowed to exercise his reported option and take the local team elsewhere—Cleveland is the rumored choice now instead of Philadelphia—or local fans who have supported the game generously are to be given a fair deal and permitted to retain the ice sport in the city that gave hockey its first American start more than three decades ago.

Team's Great Spurt

Should the club be sold now, the owners will be in line for more criticism than in the first place, as the Pirates have made a great spurt, have been playing the best hockey in the league for several weeks, and if they are transferred with a play-off chance and a championship possibility just ahead it will be a reflection on Pittsburgh as a sport town, indicating that this city failed to support a championship or near championship team.

Probably the owners themselves are in a sort of regretful mood now, for if they arranged for the sale of the club in the belief that the losing streak of the first part of the season would continue they made a very poor guess, as during recent weeks the Pirates have been the sensation of the circuit.

In fact the Pittsburgh team has been acting like a club that would make a strong bid to get into the play-offs in spite of its woeful start.

This week may make or break the local skaters. Facing a schedule of four games in seven days, with three of the series programed for foreign ice, is indeed a tough assignment, and the Bues' showing will give the fans an idea of just what to expect of their favorites when the home stretch is reached a few weeks hence.

HARD GAMES

THE three games to be played abroad by Cleghorn's icers this week are scheduled with teams now occupying play-off positions in their respective groups. Tonight the Detroit Cougars, the Pirates' rivals for third position, will be met in the Michigan city. Tuesday night the Bues will take on the Maple Leafs at Toronto; Thursday the world champion Ottawa Senators will form the opposition in the Canadian capital, while the fourth fracas is booked for the Duquesne Garden ice with the New York Americans next Saturday night.

On the strength of the Pirates' great work of the last month they should dispose of both Detroit and Toronto, but they will encounter stiff opposition in Ottawa.

The Americans also should be rather easy picking, as they have been weakened by injuries to Ilurch, Red Green, Simpson and the absence of their manager, Shorty Green.

Toronto also is in a bad way with Duncan and Carson incapacitated.

Cougars Cracked

The Sougars have their full strength available, but they have not been playing up to their standard and many are of the opinion that they have "cracked."

The champions are sailing along at a steady gait and are being doped to hand the Pirates their only defeat of the week.

In 16 games only Les Canadiens have equaled the splendid work of the Pirates. Winning nine, losing four and tying three, is the proud record of Cleghorn's ponies and if this sort of hockey is continued it is going to be difficult for rival teams to keep the Bues out of the playoffs.

If the Pirates manage to get into the money series there are not a few fans who believe they will have as good a chance to cop the world title as any other contender.

In a short series the local lads might surprise the ice world by copping the highest honors in hockeydom.

The Maroons are said to be the best money team in the league, and it will be remembered that the same Maroons had to play an overtime game to eliminate Pittsburgh in the playoffs two years ago, when they won the world title.

Since getting within reach of the select circle the Pirates have shown a decided improvement in their team play. They are passing the puck more frequently and there appears to be more harmony on the club than there was earlier in the campaign.

Only this kind of co-operation will bring success to the Garden athletes, and it behooves them to continue the harmony and work together if they hope to fatten their pocketbooks with playoff money.

Cleghorn is well pleased with the work of his players and has warned them against their greatest danger—overconfidence against the so-called weaker teams.

GRID RULES

WITH the exception of Andy Kerr of W. & J., who fears that the double and triple passes of teams that used that style of play will be seriously interfered with, prominent football coaches in Pittsburgh this week did not hesitate to express their approval of the changes, or rather, "corrections" made in the gridiron code by the national rules committee.

Dr. Sutherland, head coach at Pitt; Knute Rockne of Notre Dame, who was a visitor here on Thursday, and Elmer Layden, former Notre Dame star fullback, who is coach at Duquesne University, all expressed the opinion that the changes meant improvement, that they would clarify things, aid the officials and help football in a general sense.

The changes do not effect a fundamental alteration, but are designed to correct abuses and reduce confusion. In this respect they appear to have succeeded. There is more protection for the defensive side, thus strengthening that part of the game, and the officials will be saved from much of the confusion they experienced last year.

Text of Changes

Following are the three changes or corrections as worded by the committee:

"1. That a backward or lateral pass must be tossed at least two yards to be classed as such and that it may be recovered by the defensive side if grounded, but not advanced, thus doing away with the protection afforded under the rules last year to hidden ball and other trick passes behind the scrimmage line.

"2. That either a muff or fumble of a punt may be recovered by the kicking side, but not advanced beyond the point of recovery.

"3. That no player on the side making a forward pass and who has crossed the line of scrimmage may interfere with an opponent until the ball has been touched, thereby doing away with what the committee believes has been unfair blocking and checking, to screen the pass receiver, by players who themselves are not eligible to receive the pass."

Rockne said he liked the changes because they would make the game clearer, and because they provided some reward for a player breaking through the line and breaking up a passing attack. The defensive side may now recover but not ad-

CORBETT STOPS MITCHELL WITH RIGHT TO BODY

Gentleman Jim Tells How He Surprised Charley With Hitting Power.

Expected Boxing Match Develops Into Rough-and-Ready Slugging Session.

(This is the third and last of a series of articles by Jim Corbett on his famous fight with Charley Mitchell at Jacksonville, Fla.)

By JAMES J. CORBETT, Former Heavyweight Champion.

CHARLEY MITCHELL opened our fight in Jacksonville with a left jab that gashed open my mouth and drew blood. The punch served as a final spark to explode me. I forgot all about science and defense and went out to annihilate Mitchell.

That first round was a whirlwind affair. I was after Charley every second of the time, putting the whole force of my body into every blow and abandoning my usual jabbing tactics. But my attack, although it surprised Mitchell, didn't disconcert him.

That boy was game—clear through—and when he saw that I had elected to slug he also passed up his boxing tricks and slugged with me, toe-to-toe. The crowd, which had looked for a boxing match, long drawn out, went wild.

The second round started like the first—at a furious clip. Both of us stood in the center of the ring, slugging furiously. The round was a little more than half over when I shot home a terrific right to Mitchell's jaw and Charley went down on his knees facing me.

ATTACKED AFTER BELL

I stepped back as the referee began counting over Mitchell, and, as he reached "six," Charley lifted himself off his knees and was seemingly back in fighting position. So I rushed in at him and swung. My blow missed its mark. I didn't hit Mitchell in the head, body or anywhere. But Charley slipped back to the floor, probably to avoid being hit.

Mitchell got up and clinched until he was able to recover from his grogginess. Then he went at it again hammer and tongs and we were smashing away at each other at a hurricane clip when the gong banged, ending the second round.

As the bell clanged I did the usual thing—jumped back to my corner for the one-minute rest. My face, naturally, was toward my corner as I went to my chair and my back toward the center of the ring. Just as I was about to turn to sit in my chair, Mitchell, who had raced after me, hit me a terrific blow on the back of the ear. I whirled—we went at it again.

BODY BLOW ENDS BOUT

The fierce milling carried us from my corner into the center of the

Tech Fails to Halt Losing Streak Against State

STOVE LEAGUE CHILLYSAUCE

by CHILLY DOYLE

THE return to the National League of Sherwood Magee in the role of umpire recalls an athlete of the stormy petrel type. An aggressive performer, who could hit them far and hard, even in the absence of a "rabbit ball," Sherry added spice to the sport. He made one serious mistake many years ago—Magee struck Umpire Bill Finneran with his fist and was given severe punishment. Now he is one of the boys who call them when they are over, and sometimes when they're not over, if you listen to the players' end.

Sherry was a member of the colorful Quaker team that featured Mickey Doolan, Otto Knabe, Hans Lobert, Kitty Bransfield, Charlie Dooin, Dode Paskert and other illustrious stars of the diamond.

"I WAS always glad that I did not have to play against that crowd," Magee once told me in relating the exploits of a team that loved to "give-and-take" in a ball game. "If you were able to get around the bases whole you were very lucky. It was hard on the tough guys with Bransfield, Knabe and Doolan greeting them on the way around.

"IF YOU reached first safely you were glad to get away from Bransfield, who knew a lot of tricks. And what a reception you would get at second, especially if the boys were roughing up Mike Doolan. Mickey's high-pitched voice would dare you to come down. Knabe had a very cute way of roughing you up and Doolan could touch you in such a way that you knew you were out. O, yes, I'm glad I did not have to mix with those fellows when they were sore."

MAGEE was an impulsive fellow at the plate. He gripped his bat right down on the end, and his swing was vicious. A slow-ball pitcher would give him more trouble than a sharpshooter with a lot of stuff.

TOWARD the end of his career, George Tyler, star lefthander of the Braves of 1924, had little or no speed. As the players put it, Tyler had a slow ball and a slower one. Magee was at the plate one day and the smart Tyler was trying to dispose of him by using his "dope." Eventually George threw up a floater that scarcely reached the plate.

SHERRY threw the umpire, players and park into an uproar as he, in an aggravated frame of mind, reached out with his bare hand, caught the slow pitch, threw it back like a rifle-shot to Tyler and exclaimed:

"Throw the dang ball right!"

BILL SHERDEL, Cardinals' southpaw star, is another annoying thrower of slow balls. Sherdel has his "dope" pitch under such control that he seems almost to have a string on it. Bill fiddled with Pooch Barnhart one afternoon, he finally fanning the heavy hitter with a floater. The quiet Barnhart, after missing the tantalizing offering, shouted at Lefty:

"Why the dickens don't you go and warm up, Sherdel!"

DICK SPALDING, leftfielder of the Quakers, came to the club from the sandlot section of Philadelphia. A lefthand batter and thrower, Spalding performed in a clever manner, his all-around work being such as to assure him a position with the 1928 Phillies.

SPALDING noted a big gap between the play of the sandlots and the majors on a certain game at Forbes Field. He tells of the incident to a Philly scribe. It appears that Spalding, on first, decided to steal the middle bag. He was successful, the play being close. Imagine his surprise when he saw Pie Traynor standing over him with the ball.

"Whatinhell are you doing, taking throws at second?" barked Dick.

"Why, you poor stiff," laughed Pie—"look who you've got up there hitting?"

The batter was Cy Williams and the Buccos were using the customary rightfield shift.

UMPIRE FRANK BROWN weighs in with a new one concerning a contest between Negro teams. One colored fan was discussing the game to a friend who had not seen the battle. In a lively rendition he worked up to a point where their favorite team had three men on with Sam, their cleanup man, at the plate.

"An' what did Sam do?" asked the friend.
"Why he jus' towed 'em all in, brother!"

JACK ONSLOW, Pittsburgh district diamond luminary, who will assist Bill McKechnie at St. Louis, has had a varied career which included managerial assignments. Jack won the Virginia League flag a few years back. He had quite a lot of characters on his team, some of the backwoods youngsters knowing little of the inside of the sport.

ONSLOW had a big country pitcher who owned a lot of stuff, but he was a bit wild in several ways, including temperament. Jack was behind the bat receiving the big pitcher in a certain game. His club went into the ninth inning with a lead of one or two runs. Then with two out in the ninth, the opposing club loaded up the bases.

THE succeeding batter hit a weak roller out to the rube on the mound. It was an easy play on which to end the game and clinch the victory. As the pitcher ran for the ball, Jack stepped out on the diamond to coach him.

"Take your time, Bill," said Jack as the farmer boy picked up the ball. But the pitcher, unwinding a hard toss, sent the sphere high and far into rightfield as all hands scored. Onslow was shocked for a moment, but he finally came to, and remarked.

"That's the way to throw, Bill—never hold that ball."

"You're d—m right!" retorted the rube—"you don't hear me making any lullabys!"

TARTANS DROP CLOSE BATTLE TO NITTANY FIVE

Lead in First Period Gives Lions Winning Edge Over Improved Skibo Varsity.

Visitors Use Revised Lineup Against Plaid; Hold 18-5 Advantage at Half.

By JESS CARVER.

CARNEGIE TECH almost won a ball game last night, and a ball game that would have meant a whale of a lot to the tattered Tartan cause. They held Penn State to a 25-21 score, staging a sensational and heart-stirring rally in the second half to pull up to within striking distance of the Lions.

State started an entirely different lineup from the one that faced Pitt Friday night, only one of the men who were in the starting lineup against Pitt getting into last night's fray. He was Reilly, varsity center.

Sensational corner shots from the accurate hands of diminutive Lou Jacobsen saved the day for State. He sunk five field goals in the first half, shooting from the extreme corner of the floor, and put the Lions out in front with an 18-5 lead at half time. Tech was limited to a single field goal, scored from a lively scrimmage in front of the hoop by Crum.

TARTANS RALLY STRONG

The second half found Tech displaying a much more potent defensive game, one that effectually checked the Lions' scoring activities until the final few minutes of play. Bond, Tartan varsity center, carried the major share of the attacking burden for Tech, with four splendid field goals.

Tech pulled up to within two points of State with only four minutes left to play, but the Center Countians were equal to the task of holding on to the lead, and a field goal by Utz Reilly and foul shots by Jacobsen and Stevie Hamas clinched the old ball game.

Jacobsen was the leading scorer with 11 points. The lineup:

Tech—21.		State—25.
Brown	F	Jacobsen
Harpster	F	Hamas
Bond	C	Brownstein
Hitchcock	G	Wilson
White (C.)	G	(C.) Baron

Substitutions—Tech: Crum for Brown, Letzelter for Crum, High for White. State: Reilly for Brownstein. Field goals—Tech: Bond 4, Hitchcock, White, Crum. State: Jacobsen 5, Hamas 3, Brownstein, Reilly. Foul goals—Tech, 7 out of 11; State, 5 out of 17. Referee—Dan Dougherty. Umpire—McGlinchy.

Pitchers in Trade

PIRATE AGAIN—Pitcher Burleigh Grimes, who broke into the big show as a member of the Pirates back in 1917 and then was traded to the Brooklyn Dodgers, with whom he became a star, and now returns to the local club in a straight swap for Pitcher Vic Aldridge, announced yesterday.

LEAVES BUCS—Vic Aldridge, the Hoosier schoolmaster pitcher of the Pirates, who has been traded to the New York Giants for Pitcher Burleigh Grimes.

SOCCER HEADS SUSPENDED

By TOM BIRKS.

The suspensions of William Carson and Samuel Parks, president and secretary of the West Penn Soccer Football Association, was voted at a large gathering of delegates, managers and fans in the Hotel Henry last evening.

Neither official was present to fight the charges preferred by the delegates. The Chartiers Valley, International and District leagues voted on the suspension.

The suspension will stand until the officials appear through the newly-formed appeals committee for a rehearing of their case.

Injury to Keep Bass Idle Three Months

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—A game little ring terrier, Benny Bass, of Philadelphia, lay in a private hospital tonight and pondered the vicissitudes of a fight "racket" that brought him a broken collarbone in the midst of the greatest opportunity of his fistic lifetime.

About his right shoulder snuggled a plaster cast, holding together a fractured clevicle, suffered in the third round of his brilliant but unsuccessful bulldog effort to wrest the featherweight crown from Tony Canzoneri in a 15-round slugfest last night. Besides the broken main bones, the cast held in place splinters of bone ground away in the final 12 rounds, when, Bass, despite the agony of his hurt, smashed and tore at the elusive Italian in a thrilling effort to win the title.

Most critics feel it will take another battle to settle all argument over the question of supremacy. Bass' injury will keep him out of the ring for three months.

Community Defeated By Westminster, 32-15

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., Feb. 11.—The crack North Side Community House basketball team, one of the favorites to win the A. A. U. championship of Pittsburgh, went down to defeat here tonight at the hands of the Westminster College quintet, 32 to 15. The visitors were unable to find their usual form and never threatened the local outfield. The lineup:

Leaders Displaced in Final Rolling of Pin Tourney

Between Rounds
Newsy Notes and Comment on the Doings of the Boxers

By HARRY KECK, Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

THAT was a funny knockout that Joey Sangor, Bud Taylor's particular Nemesis, scored over him in Chicago Thursday night, when he was declared the victor in the seventh round after the bantamweight champion had claimed a foul from a left hook to the body and had refused to get up off the floor. According to accounts of the battle, Taylor was permitted to remain on the floor for five minutes' rest and an examination by the commission's doctor before the decision was rendered and then was ordered to submit to another physical examination on the afternoon of the following day.

If that isn't messing up a bad situation, then nothing is.

A boxer either is fouled or he isn't and the referee is in the ring to see what is going on. If, in his judgment, the boxer is fouled and seriously injured, he should halt the proceedings at once and declare the injured man the winner on a foul. If he is not, and refuses to get off the floor and continue, he should be counted out. Too many referees, however, vacillate and are lost. Perhaps they have uppermost in their minds the thought of giving the fans a run for their money and for this reason are slow in making a definite decision.

Hesitation never helps such a situation. It raises a doubt in the minds of the onlookers and further complicates matters. Suppose baseball umpires similarly hesitated in making their decisions on close plays. What would happen? You guessed it—endless confusion and nothing less than mob scenes. Better to have a referee err occasionally than to permit a situation to get out of his control, as evidently was the case at Chicago.

bantamweight champion, on the floor in the seventh round of his bout with Joey Sangor at Chicago Thursday night. He claimed a foul, which was disallowed, and was given five minutes' rest, but failed to continue, with the result that his opponent was awarded a knockout victory. It was Sangor's third triumph over Taylor in four starts and the finish was one of the strangest in years in an important battle. Taylor's title was not at stake as the men fought at catchweights.

Incidentally, Taylor was on the opposite end of another strange finish in a recent bout with Phil Zwick of Cleveland. Zwick held his own in the first round and was fighting hard in the second when he went down from a left hook to the jaw. He was calmly taking the count of nine to recover from the blow and was a bit slow in getting up and the referee tolled 10 before he could get his knees clear of the floor. He arose in good condition and wanted to continue, but the referee ruled he had been counted out and very properly declared the bout finished with Taylor the victor.

Taylor always has had his hands full with Sangor, who has beaten him in three out of four bouts. Bud seemingly is on the downgrade. He finds it difficult longer to make the bantamweight limit and does not appear to be strong enough to hold his own with the leading featherweights. Tony Canzoneri recently handed him a beating in New York.

Sandy's Profit and Loss Bout

EVERY once in a while a manager of a young boxer makes a mistake in matching his man for a bout in which the latter has everything to lose and nothing to gain. Such a match was Sandy Seifert's with Battling Levinsky at Motor Square Garden last Monday night. Sandy, who has ambitions of going far in the ring, had nothing to gain beating the washed-up veteran and everything to lose if the latter came anywhere near holding him even. And that's just what the cagy veteran did. Levinsky called into play all of his tricks and outgeneraled Seifert to the extent that the judges disagreed at the close of the slow, tame affair and the referee called the thing a draw, while many of the onlookers, including this writer, were of the opinion that Levinsky had outscored his younger opponent.

The result was quite a blow to Sandy's pride and he felt it keenly. He would have done much better against a younger and more willing mixer than Levinsky, who had to gauge his pace carefully to be able to travel the route and did so with the finesse of a past master of the art of boxing. Levinsky for all that he has lost the speed and agility that his legs once knew, still manages to get by with the best of them and will fool many other foes before he quits his present comeback campaign, and he might have messed up things for even more highly touted opponents than Seifert last Monday night. Sandy will do well to forget the incident and charge up the bout to profit and loss and benefit from the experience and the tricks he learned from the nimble-witted veteran.

Hudkins and Baker Top Card

THE big show of this week features Ace Hudkins and Sergt. Sammy Baker in Madison Square Garden, New York. It will be their third meeting. Baker stopped the Ace in New York last summer and then dropped a 10-round decision to him on the Coast. The winner of next Friday night's melee has been promised a crack at Joe Dundee and the latter's world welterweight title. . . . Phil Goldstein, local lightweight, boxes Freddie Mueller, of Buffalo, in the latter's home town Monday night. Phil scored a no-decision victory over Al Bryant, Negro of Newark, N. J., at Newark last Monday night, although accounts of the bout sent out reported Bryant as the victor. Clippings from the Newark newspapers, just received, give Goldstein the fight all the way. Harry Dudley, Negro welterweight, recently a Pittsburgher, lost a hard-fought 10-round decision to Eddie Burnbrook, of Latrobe, in the semi-final. . . . Italian Joe Gans has just won the middleweight championship of the National Guard of New York. It's the first title the grizzled veteran has won in 21 years of battling with the toughest in the game.

WHOLESALE changes occurred among the leaders in the final day's rolling in the annual Tri-State tenpin tournament, completed last night on the Penn Recreation alleys. The work of out-of-town rollers featured.

Coslosky of the P. A. A., who had led in the singles since the opening day with a score of 594, was dropped to sixth place when J. Gramlich of Wheeling toppled 628 pins to assume the lead, and three others also rolled over the 600 mark and one close to it. Mike Jessick of the North Side just missed winning the singles title when he got only seven pins on his spare in the last frame and finished one pin behind Gramlich. Brown of Tarentum rolled 618 for third place, G. Rechtenwald 614 for fourth and Burke 596 for fifth. Coslosky was the only survivor of the day among the first 10 in the individual event.

W. Focks of Tarentum carried off the all-events honors with a total of 1190.

H. F. Martin and F. W. Boldt of Altoona displaced Eddie Votel and Palmer for the doubles lead and there were three other changes among the first 10 in this division.

The first five teams in the five-men event held their places, the Harris team of Tarentum rolling high for the day with 2677. The Palace team of Tarentum finished in the lead.

Two Big Upsets Mark City Senior Loop Race

By VERNON A. SWARTSFAGER.

FRIDAY of last week sounded two more startling upsets in the City Senior League and the outlook for the last race down the stretch isn't just as dull as it might be. One thing seems to be decided by the double defeat, South Hills and Fifth Avenue, and that is a playoff is almost certain in Section II, inasmuch as neither team will face, in the course of the remaining part of the league schedule, an opponent strong enough to hand a second set-back. It is a bit different in Section I, where Schenley and Fifth Avenue have yet to battle. The winner of that game will undoubtedly represent its division in the championship elimination series.

FIFTH NOSED OUT

Westinghouse certainly put its strongest force into action to topple the Downtowners by a single point, and its team certainly should be heartily commended upon its good fortune. Allegheny, on the other hand, more than just nosed out South Hills.

The defeats total three upsets this season altogether, Fifth Avenue's spectacular victory over Schenley a few weeks ago being the first to be marked up.

Of the games this week in the City Senior League there is little anticipation of "surprise" results. Peabody invades Fifth Avenue, and South goes to Westinghouse in Section 1 games on Tuesday, while on Friday the limelight centers in Section 2 with Langley at South Hills, Allegheny at Oliver and Perry at Carrick.

TO PLAY IN BUFFALO

An interesting game in the Inter-State Preparatory School League will find the proteges of Capt. Palmer, representing Shady Side Academy, against the Nichols School in Buffalo on Saturday. Schenley is opposed on the home court in Aspinwall on Tuesday.

Understand that Herman Lamark, former captain of the Coraopolis High School eleven, who has been starring for Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport has entered the University of Pennsylvania, according to his brother, and likely will go out for the Feshman team in the fall.

Week's Sport Review

By JAMES J. LONG

vance a grounded forward or lateral pass. Layden gave similar reasons for his approval.

Jock Pleased

Coach Sutherland of Pitt expressed the opinion of most fans in this section when he said that he heartily approved the corrections because they meant practically that the committee had not disturbed or altered the game.

"The report of the rules committee shows that the coaches of the country knew what they were doing and that they did a fine thing when they decided at their previous meeting that the game should be allowed to stand unchanged. Those were my sentiments exactly.

"That is what the committee has allowed it to do, practically. The rule makers did not change the game, but merely simplified it slightly in a way that will bring good results.

"It is a wise step to alter the rule on lateral and backward passes, because the provision for a two-yard pass will make such plays less confusing to the officials, and it is also a good move to give the defensive side a chance to get the ball on grounded passes and to break up the practice of screening forward passes by rough and unfair blocking and checking. Football will be a better game next fall as a result.

"The changes made will not affect Pitt's game in the main, but the fact that the goal posts are not to be returned to the goal line will bring a change in our system. We are not going to try for so many field goals hereafter as we might attempt if the goal posts were part of the playing field, as they should be, in my opinion. Last season we tried twice as many field goals as any of the college teams, and at that we attempted only six. We missed all but one, getting that against Tech. Some of the other big college elevens tried for field goals only twice."

FLOOR BOOM

THAT college basketball has finally come into its own here and has grown in popularity and drawing power to an extent never dreamed of in the early days of the floor game as a sport for the big schools will be demonstrated to the complete satisfaction of any doubting persons next Saturday night at the Pitt Stadium.

First the halls of average size hereabouts more than sufficed to take care of all the college basketball patrons. Then, when those were outgrown, Carnegie Tech and Duquesne University provided greater space, and finally Pitt bobbed up with a stadium in which the indoor section set apart for basketball will accommodate 4,000 persons.

If you want to convince yourself as to how rapidly basketball has grown, just be a little tardy in arriving at the Panther stadium next Saturday night and then try to get in. As stated above, there are accommodations for 4,000 persons, but at least 10,000 tickets could be sold without the least bit of ballyhooing.

One reason is that the unbeaten Panthers have made such a sensational record so far this season by winning 13 games in a row that they are beginning to look like the outstanding college team of the season, and another reason is their opponents next Saturday night will be George Keogan's crack passers from the University of Notre Dame.

These features combined are enough to arouse the populace as never before over a local basketball game, and there is no question that a record for attendance at a floor game here will be established.

Notre Dame, of course, has an athletic reputation that makes any of her teams strong drawing cards, and even before the Pitt game the South Benders probably will pack Carnegie Tech when they play there on Friday night.

But naturally the drawing power of Saturday night's game will be all the greater because of Pitt's remarkable record and the possibility that this game may bring the locals' first defeat.

The teams met once before and Notre Dame was the winner, but the Pitt team of that time was not to be compared with the sensational combination that Coach Carlson has developed this season.

The Panthers will play one other game before tackling the Hoosier stars, as Allegheny College will play here Wednesday night. If the locals get away with that game, as is strongly probable, they will face Notre Dame with a perfect record for the season.

Up to date the Pitt five has placed the following impressive showing to its credit:

Pitt	49—Michigan	30
Pitt	28—Chicago	26
Pitt	39—Northwestern	34
Pitt	44—Iowa	40
Pitt	42—Dartmouth	33

ring. There we stood, toe to toe, banging at each other. Meanwhile, Mitchell's seconds and mine, as well as the referee, tried to separate us while the crowd was in an uproar. The ring officials finally succeeded in prying us apart, but not before several of them got in the way of some wild punches.

Mitchell's attack on me from behind during the rest period only added to my fury and when the third round bell called us into action again I went out to finish him in that round or die in the attempt. I rushed him like a wild bull and hit him with everything I had. Charley fought back gamely, but I soon saw that my blows were weakening him.

As he started to sidestep a left lead, I shot my right into his body—perhaps the hardest blow I ever hit any man in my life. Charley sagged and then I shot a lightning right to his jaw. The blow landed full on the point of the chin—and Charley toppled toward me.

Mitchell went down and was counted out. Thus I won the fight, the $20,000 purse, the $10,000 side bet and the undisputed title of heavyweight champion of the world.

ARRESTED AFTER BATTLE

That ought to end the story. But it doesn't. Just about as soon as Charley recovered from the wallop we were arrested, charged with fracturing the laws of the state of Florida. The authorities had been kind enough not to halt the bout, but there the leniency ended. Charley and I were taken into custody and hustled off to jail.

But we weren't locked up. As soon as we arrived at the jail and the charges had been preferred against us bail for each of us was fixed at $5,000. We furnished it on the spot and so avoided a barred window outlook and a bread-and-water diet.

The date of our trial was fixed for the latter part of March, and Charley and I were on hand when the time came. A jury trial was held and it returned a verdict of "not guilty" for both Mitchell and myself.

After the formalities of our dismissal were over, I looked over at Charley, he looked at me—and both of us smiled. The old enmity between us that had lasted for nearly three years was gone in a twinkling, and Charley and I went out of the courtroom together, arm in arm.

LONG FEUD ENDS

As we walked along one of the very first things he said to me was: "Jim, you deceived me!"

"How's that?" I asked.

"These advisers of mine said you couldn't hit. They told me that all you had was a left jab. I watched for it, but, you bloomin' beggar, you didn't use it. I say, Corbett, why didn't you let me know you could hit right-handers to the body, hey, wot?"

VERONAS TRIUMPH

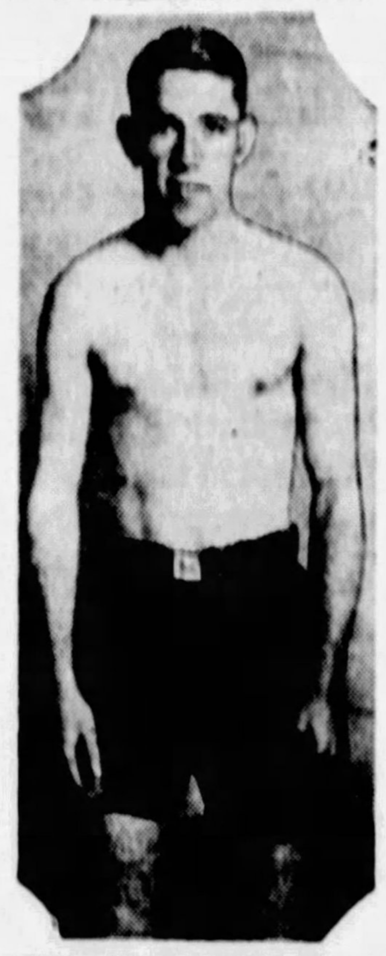
The J. J. Veronas defeated the McMullin-Montgomery team in a City League game at Ingram Saturday night, 29 to 20. The lineup:

Verona—29.		McM.-Mont.—20.
Sudiano	F	Bradbury
P. Albert	F	McMullin
Vergello	C	Beattie
Love	G	Hayes
Del Greco	G	Pannabaker

J. J. Verona	18	11—29
McMullin-Montgomery	9	11—20

Substitutions—J. J. Verona: Mongelles, Juliano, F. Albert, Gardiano. McMullin-Montgomery: Moyar. Field goals—J. J. Verona: Sudiano 5, Love 4, P. Albert, Del Greco, Juliano, F. Albert. McMullin-Montgomery: Hayes 4, Beattie 2, Bradbury, McMullin. Foul goals—J. J. Verona, 2 out of 5; McMullin-Montgomery 4 out of 8. Time of periods—8 minutes. Referee—L. Carroll.

Star



FROM BOSTON—Johnny Ryan, bantamweight star of Boston, who has been doing most of his recent boxing around Erie and will appear in Pittsburgh shortly. He claims 37 knockout victories in 57 bouts and a record of never having been defeated. He holds two victories over Johnny Vacca, three over Terry Martin, one over Pittsburgh Mike Moran, one over Johnny Dunn of New Kensington and knockouts over Jacinto Valdez, Sammy Fuller and others. Reed Brown will represent him in this section.

STATE TITLE BOUT SIGNED

Davies and Wolgast to Box For Crown at Motor Square Garden Next Week.

WILLIE DAVIES of Charleroi and Midget Wolgast of Philadelphia will meet in the 10-round main bout at Motor Square Garden Monday night of next week with the state flyweight title at stake. There will be no show in the East End arena Monday night. An attempt was made to land this match for this week, but Davies declined to sign on such short notice.

Davies won the state flyweight championship two years ago and has defended it several times. A few months ago he lost a referee's decision to Wolgast at Philadelphia and the latter claimed the laurels. Later Wolgast lost to Billy Kelly at Scranton and Davies last week whipped Kelly at Chicago, which would appear to wipe out the Wolgast setback, but Willie is keen about fighting the Midget again here and making it unanimous. The clash will be the third between the pair. Willie first fought Wolgast at Atlantic City and defeated him and he claims he also really won the Philadelphia fight, but the judges disagreed and the referee voted for Wolgast. Davies is back in his best form again following a bit of a slump and hopes to resume his former position as an outstanding contender for the world title.

Nick Susnell of Rochester, Pa., and Jack Katkish of Lawrenceville will meet in a return bout in the eight-round semi-final of the next Motor Square show and Eddie Jiggs of Sharpsburg will box Johnny Riley of Homestead in the first number. The second bout remains to be arranged.

SHOW AT M'KEESPORT

Promoter Jim McGirr will present a show of three eight-round bouts and a six-rounder at McKeesport Thursday night. Allen Beatty of McKeesport, formerly of Uniontown, will appear against Mickey Solomon of New Castle in one of the eight-rounders and Linn Jordan, Negro middleweight of Johnstown, will be seen in another. Ike McFowler, Negro heavyweight of Johnstown, will oppose Jack Wellis of Wheeling in the six-rounder.

The Motor Square Club is working on a match between Cuddy DeMarco and Willie Harmon for February 27. Harmon recently stopped Young Saylor and outfought Jack Zivic in bouts here.

Jack M'Farland's bout with Jackie Johnston at Hamilton, Ontario, Friday night was postponed when Johnston was stricken by appendicitis just before ring time. McFarland will meet another opponent at the same club Wednesday night.

Nick Susnell has been offered a bout with Harry Harris over the eight-round route at Mingo Junction, O., February 27. Petey Gallagher will meet Young Swechey in the semi-final.

Johnny Windsor, local welterweight, who has been boxing around Toledo and Cincinnati recently, plans to return to Florida for a series of four bouts. He boxed in Florida last winter.

George Tomosky has been matched with Petey Roberts for a six-round bout at Wheeling Monday night of next week.

BENEFIT AT JOHNSTOWN

Teddy Welch of McKeesport and Georgie Harris of Niles, O., will meet in the main bout of a show of four eight-rounders for the benefit of the Miners' Relief Fund in Capital Hall, Johnstown, Thursday night. Steve O'Malley will box Jack Bany, Kid Crutchfield will meet Ike McFowler and Joe Elrene will tangle with Eddie Carver in the other bouts. Welch also is matched with Johnny Shappard at Oil City February 27.

Freddie Lux, former lightweight boxer of McKeesport, now is working in Baltimore, where he may do some fighting.

BOWLING and BILLIARDS

WITH the Tri-State Tenpin Tournament, the first of the annual bowling fixtures, out of the way, the fourteenth annual tournament of the Southern Duckpin Association will get under way next Wednesday on the Club alleys, downtown. Entries have been received from throughout Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia, and the event promises to be one of the best in years. George B. Wessa is in charge.

Announcement yesterday that the first national duckpin tournament of the American Duckpin Congress, an organization founded here and modeled along the lines of the American Bowling Congress of tenpin fame, would be held on the Haus alleys, North Side, April 9 to 21, come as pleasing news to the followers of the popular sport. It means that virtually every local bowler will have a chance to compete against the best in the land without leaving his home city. The event has the hearty support of all of the bowling alley proprietors of this section and should go a long way toward booming the sport in the Pittsburgh district.

Three teams are closely bunched for first place in the Westinghouse Duckpin League, which conducts its games on the Votel alleys in East Pittsburgh. Rate is leading at the present time by a full game, but is being threatened by the Inspection and Test and Employes Store. The standing of the league follows:

	Won	Lost
Rate	35	16
Inspection and Test	37	17
Employes Store	36	18
Switchboard	29	26
Circuit Breaker	22	32
Sales	21	33
Radio	18	36
Engr.	15	39

Davis of the Schenley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church team of the Oakland Y. M. C. A. Church League has taken first place among the individual scorers with a mark of 197, rolled against Bellefield Presbyterian last week.

Morris of the Bureau of Mines team, enrolled in the Oakland Y. M. C. A. Business Men's League, came through with a remarkable score of 217 last week, giving him the best mark in the loop. Carnegie Library was the victim.

Lewis of Sales is leading the individual scorers of the Westinghouse Duckpin League with an average of 148.

Accounting extended By Product, leader in the Koppers League, to the limit before bowing in defeat in two out of three games bowled last week. Accounting dropped the first game by 59 pins, the second by two pins and won the third by seven pins.

Each winning both of their games, Bobby Carter of Kalmer's and Billy Greenwood of Ellis' wound up last week as they began it, tied for first place in the Pittsburgh Three-Cushion Billiard League. Another notable change in the standing of the loop, which is meeting with great success in its first season, was the rise of Eddie Smith, of Dimling's, to third place. This gives Chris Dimling two players in the first four, as George Pitfield is hanging on in fourth notch, only a half-game behind Eddie.

The Star bowling team defeated Brentwood in a match game, winning two out of three games by a total score of 854 to 824. Al Steinhauser, the youngest member in the South Hills League, of which both teams are members, had an average of 177.

Community House Looms as A. A. U. Titleholder

The GREAT OUTDOORS By Gib Marsh

THE training season for sporting dogs in Pennsylvania is drawing to a close, February 29, being the final day for the running of hounds and the working of bird dogs on small game. Being a mild winter both hounds and bird dogs were run right through the cold weather months and many puppies, setters, pointers, spaniels, beagles and raccoon hounds received their early schooling. With quail, ringneck pheasants and rabbits plentiful it was a successful training season.

Gib Marsh

The game code in Pennsylvania includes liberal clauses for the training of sporting dogs, the season opening August 20, and concluding the last day of February. The opening in August permits the preparation of dogs for the early field trials and the hunting season. However, the weather is seldom favorable for any severe training in August and September. It is too warm. About the middle of October the weather is more suiting for educating beagles and bird dogs. Usually all dogs are a trifle overweight in September as a result of their long season of inactivity and they are not inclined to pep-up in their work of finding birds or routing rabbits, especially when the temperature is still high. During the winter months much progress can be made in the schooling of bird dogs and hounds. Temperatures hovering about the freezing point permits dogs to be put through extensive work. And it is long runs and workouts that really contribute to the development of the muscular system and endurance.

DURING March rabbits are in litter and in April the game birds preparing for nesting. So sporting dogs must be kept out of the thickets and fields. The reference to the game breeding invites thought about the wintering of the small game.

Game birds and rabbits were not exposed to any serious hardships during the past few months. The snow was never on the ground for any lengthy periods, food was plentiful and the few covies of quail I have observed recently seem to be in good flesh and strong. In some sections of the state where deepe. snows prevailed and remained longer on the ground some covies may have suffered from the want of food, but that condition was not general.

During the recent winter months the trappers were never active and large numbers of weasels, minks and foxes were trapped. It is this vermin which contributes to the real destruction of small game. Records show that the game commission paid out large sums for bounties, especially on weasels, which are vicious killers. So with the mild winter and constant warfare on game-destroying vermin there should be plenty of healthy seed stock in the fields for the coming breeding season.

As quail and rabbits cannot be purchased in other states in the same large numbers as in former years the Pennsylvania game commissioners are required to give more thought and effort in breeding from the native stock. The commission is liberal in its appropriations for the feeding and sheltering of game during the winter months. Ten years ago it was not a serious problem to purchase breeding stock, both quail and rabbits, in other states, but it is difficult now because the western and southwestern states, where former large purchases were made, are conserving their seed stock and not selling it.

WHEN this month is concluded the sportsmen will begin to think of their other outdoor pastimes, such as trapshooting, rifle shooting, the anglers will start preparation for the opening of the trout season, April 15.

At the various gun clubs throughout the country the clay target throwing traps will be oiled up for the spring practice. Those anglers interested in casting and stream fishing will carry their reels and rods to some level field or their back yards for casting practice. A good brand of accuracy is necessary to be successful in both pastimes. A stiff wrist or a thumb dull to touch will not contribute to the landing of many trout.

To make a good score at the traps the gunner must tune up his eyes in the sun, must harden his shoulder to withstand the recoil of the gun; briefly, his trigger finger, his eyes and brain must be schooled to co-ordinate. Otherwise he is going to miss many targets.

March is the training period for the shooters and anglers. During April the clay target contests open throughout the country. For local gunners the first important contest will be staged in April, the opening tournament of the Western Pennsylvania Trapshooters' League. And the big event for the anglers is the opening of the trout season, April 15. Usually March includes several week-end days of the fair and warm weather variety offering parctice at casting and busting targets.

ALDRIDGE CLUB BEATEN

The Ecaowasin Class of the Union Baptist Church defeated the Aldridge Club Saturday night on the South Side Community House floor, 27 to 26. Williams led in the scoring with five baskets.

HILL TOP Y WINS

The Hill Top Y basketball team had no difficulty defeating Lawrenceville Y Saturday night, 70 to 16.

NORTH SIDERS HIGHLY RATED AS CAGE TEAM

Victory Over Doc Gordons Stamps Winners as Strong Contenders for Laurels.

Benefit Basketball Carnival For Destitute Miners Is Scheduled Next Saturday.

By JULIUS LEVIN.

THAT the team winning the A, A, U, championship of the Allegheny Mountain Association this season will be the quintet disposing of the North Side Community House passers is the consensus of opinion among followers of the amateur game hereabouts.

The North Side Community House passers this winter possess what many close followers of the sport consider to be the strongest amateur team developed hereabouts in many years, their recent victory over the Doc Gordons, last year's champions, leaving no doubt as to their superiority over the titleholders.

FACE HARD ROAD

Community House has been coming along in fine style, showing improvement with each game. The victory over the Doc Gordons was not their first big achievement of the current season, the North Siders having beaten the crack Hill Top Y. M. C. A. and Young Men's Hebrew Association in a convincing manner.

Community House still has a rocky road to travel in the remaining games of the A. A. U. tournament, but if its showing to date is any criterion of its ability as a floor machine, the North Side quintet stands an excellent chance of ascending the throne recently vacated by the Doc Gordons.

The fine showing of the North Siders has their supporters keyed up to a high pitch and they are attracting crowds wherever they play. Judging by their showing to date this team promises to replace the Heinz House as the outstanding floor machine on the Allegheny side of the river.

A well-balanced quintet that plays clean basketball at all times, the Community House this year boasts of its strongest team in its history.

Eager to contribute to the miners' fund being raised in the Greater Pittsburgh district, local independent clubs will stage a benefit basketball carnival at Duquesne University next Saturday night, when three high-class games as well as other entertainment will be presented.

The feature attraction will be the battle between the Enoch Rauh Club, one of the favorites to win the second-round championship of the Allegheny County League, and the J. J. Mieles, champions of the Pittsburgh and Olde Valley League.

The two preliminaries arranged by J. J. Freund, Jr., in charge of the program, brings together the Duquesne Light and Reliance Life in a one-game series that will determine which of the two teams is the first-half champion of the Commercial-Industrial League, while the other finds the J. J. Veronas in action against the Osceola Club for the first-half laurels of the City League. Both races in the first half ended in deadlocks.

TWO STRONG TEAMS

The battle between the Rauhs and the Mieles should prove a magnet for the followers of independent basketball in view of the fact that it brings together two of the best teams in their respective classes.

While the Rauhs will take the floor a favorite to defeat the Mieles owing to the fact that they have been meeting with sterner opposition, the followers of the Mieles are looking for the P. & O. League champs to extend their rivals to the limit. The Rauhs play in first-class ranks, while the Mieles are classified as a light first-class team.

A varied program of entertainment is planned and indications are that Duquesne University will be packed to capacity when the first game starts next Saturday night.

O'Farrell, Card Catcher, Issued License to Wed

CHICAGO, Feb. 11. A MARRIAGE license was issued here today to Bob O'Farrell, star catcher of the St. Louis Cardinals, and Miss Arelene Edwards.

O'Farrell gave his home as Waukegan, Ill. Miss Edwards' home is in Chicago.

They eluded newspapermen at the marriage license bureau and gave no word of when they planned to be married. O'Farrell gave his age as 31, and Miss Edwards her's as 26.

O'Farrell's mother at Waukegan said the couple planned to be married in Chicago some day next week. She said they had been acquainted for eight years, and engaged for a year.

HOCKEY

the first period, and after they had slowed the locals down to a walk by their prize ring tactics they started in to play hockey and coasted into victory.

The scoring was confined to the first and third periods, and it was Montreal's devotion to shin and skull whacking that gave Pittsburgh a chance to register its lone tally. When two Maroons were in the penalty box, Tex White corralled a loose puck near the invaders' cage, stick-handled brilliantly and with great coolness, easily beat Benedict for the goal that put the locals in the lead for the brief span of two minutes. At this stage the Bucs were found shorthanded and Lamb and Stewart, grasping the opportunity, worked a combination that permitted the former to skate in on top of Worters and equalize. The first period ended without further incident and the checking in midice in the second stanza was such that neither club was able to even threaten a score, but in the final stanza Montreal attacked with vim and vigor. The Maroons kept up a continual pressure for five minutes, at which time their center, Smith, caged the winning goal on a brilliant unassisted effort. After passing the forwards Smith pulled the rare feat of fooling Burke and caught Worters with an open goal. Stewart added the Maroons' third tally just 40 seconds from the close of the fight, when Dutton gave him a neat pass right at the goal mouth.

The Pirates, who play the Cougars in Detroit Sunday night, are still three points out of third place and a play-off berth. The lineup:

Montreal—3.		Pittsburgh—1.
Benedict	G	Worters
Herbert	L.D.	Burke
Dutton	R.D.	McCaffrey
R. J. Smith	R.W.	Darragh
Ward	L.W.	Cotton
Stewart	C.	Miller

Score by periods:

Montreal	1	0	2—3
Pittsburgh	1	0	0—1

ALDRIDGE NOTIFIED

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Vic Aldridge, star pitcher of the Pittsburgh Pirates for the last several seasons, who makes his winter home here had little to say this evening when informed of his being traded to the New York Giants for Burleigh Grimes, veteran hurler.

Aldridge said that his only knowledge of the trade was a wire from Jim Tierney, secretary of the Giants, which informed him that he had been traded to the Giants without stating the other player involved in the deal. However, he added that all baseball trades usually worked out for the best and that he believed this one would do the same.

Aldridge said he anticipated no trouble in reaching contract terms. Aldridge and Jim Elliott, Brooklyn southpaw, have been working out for some time in Bud Taylor's gymnasium here and are rounding into shape.

Local Team, Burke Beaten in Philly

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—Pittsburgh was eliminated at the hands of New York, 5 to 0, in the team matches and J. Scott Burke of the Steel City was defeated by Myles F. Baker of Boston, defending titleholder, 15-5, 15-7, 15-5, in the second round of the National squash racquets tournament being played here. Later Baker reached the semi-final round by setting down Wallace F. Johnson, 15-13, 11-15, 15-3, 14-7 and 15-5, in the third round.

Davis & Elkins Noses Out W. Va.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Feb. 11.—(AP.)—Davis-Elkins made a desperate rally in the final two minutes of its game with the West Virginia University basketball team here tonight and won, 46-43. It was the first contest of a three-game series.

Y. M. H. A. ADVANCES

The Y. M. H. A. varsity basketball team advanced another round in the A. A. U. championship Saturday, defeating the Carnegie Club in a fast contest on the Y. M. H. A. floor, 29 to 14.

Pirates Send Vic Aldridge to Giants In Straight Swap For Burleigh Grimes

holdouts this season, but this rumor has been denied by the officials of the two clubs involved. While Grimes has not signed a contract for the 1928 pennant race, officials of the Giants have given the Corsair management assurance that Burleigh will be in the fold when the spring training activities begin. In view of the fact that the Pirates sent Aldridge his contract only two days ago, there is very little likelihood of the veteran being dissatisfied with the terms offered him.

The deal involves two veteran right-handers who have seen considerable service in the National League. Followers of the Pirates, however, are of the opinion that the local club got the better of the exchange. Aldridge's work on the mound during the last stages of the 1927 pennant race was a big disappointment, while Grimes, on the other hand, twirled some brilliant games for the Giants in the last few months of the race. Aldridge and Grimes are about the same age, both being born in 1894.

CAME HERE FROM CUBS

Aldridge's departure from the ranks of the Pirates leaves only George Grantham of the three Cub stars who figured in the famous Pittsburgh-Chicago deal of 1924 still with the local club. In that transaction the Pirates sent Wilbur Cooper, Charley Grimm and Rabbit Maranville to the Bruins in exchange for George Grantham, Victor Aldridge and Al Niehaus. The Cubs likewise have only one player to show for that deal, Grimm being the regular first sacker and captain of the team. Niehaus failed to come up to requirements and was later traded to the Reds for Pitcher Tom Sheehan, who after a season with the Corsairs was sent back to the American Association.

Aldridge was born in Indiana Springs, Ind., on October 25, 1894, and started his pitching career with the Indianapolis club of the American Association in August of 1914.

The Hoosiers released Aldridge to the Denver club under option in March of 1915 and recalled him in May only to send him to Erie for further seasoning. In August he returned to the Hoosiers and remained with them until August of 1916 when he was sold to the Chicago Cubs. During the war years of 1917 and 1918 Aldridge enlisted in the Navy and was placed on the Cubs' reserve list. When he returned to the Cubs in 1919, Aldridge was released to the Los Angeles club of the Pacific Coast League and resold to the Cubs in January of 1922. Aldridge pitched good ball for the Bruins until 1923, when after the close of the season he was traded to the Pirates.

BROKE IN WITH BUCS

Grimes, who started his major league career with the same club to which he returns, began his baseball activities in 1913 with Ottumwa and Chattanooga. Chattanooga released him to Birmingham in 1914, which club sent him to Richmond of the Virginia League under option, recalling him in August of the same year. Grimes remained with Birmingham in the Southern Association during 1915 and 1916, being sold to Pittsburgh in July of 1916. Grimes finished the season with the Pirates and remained with the during course of the 1917 campaign. In January of 1918, Grimes, along with Chuck Ward and Al Mamaux, was traded to the Brooklyn Dodgers for Outfielder Casey Stengel and Second Baseman George Cutshaw. Incidentally, Mamaux during the last two years has been leading the pitchers of the International League in effectiveness and stands an excellent chance of returning to the big leagues. Mamaux first gained recognition as a pitcher in Pittsburgh, being a star on the mound for the Duquesne University nine. The Pirates signed him after he made a fine record on the collegiate and independent diamonds hereabouts and after several years of success with them he was sold to the Giants.

GRIMES' RECORD GOOD

Grimes' record for 1927 eclipsed that made by Aldridge, the Giants' righthander scoring 19 victories while losing only eight games, whereas Aldridge recorded only 15 victories and lost 10. Grimes' record against the Pirates was two and two, losing to Aldridge on May 12, 9 to 4, and to Meadows on June 7, 9 to 8. Grimes was pounded from the mound in both games. Grimes scored his two victories over the Pirates on July 24, 9 to 2, at the expense of Joe Dawson and on August 19 5 to 2, defeating Ray Kremer.

One of Grimes' great pitching feats last year was a string of 13 successive victories. He started the winning streak on July 15 when he defeated the Reds, 4 to 1. He followed this victory with two over Pittsburgh, two over Chicago, three over St. Louis, one over Brooklyn, three over Cincinnati and one over Philadelphia. Grimes was not checked until September 26 when he lasted only two and two-third innings against the Phillies, losing to Fred Fitzsimmons, 7 to 2.

ALDRIDGE "STREAKY"

Aldridge on the other hand pitched in streaks during the 1927 season, winning with two defeats in a row, before he managed to get off to a winning streak of five straight. He lost the next two and then won five more in a row. His next four efforts resulted in defeats. After breaking this losing streak he added four more victories in a row, lost one, won another and then dropped his last game of the season on October 1 to Red Lucas of the Reds, 2 to 1. Their records for 1927 follow:

Manorial Air Clings to Homes of Upper Fifth Ave.

Representative Pittsburgh Homes Maintain Beauty of Exclusive Fifth Avenue Districts

BEECHWOOD—The W. J. Guthrie house at the southwest corner of Fifth avenue and Beechwood boulevard is on the eastern boundary of the exclusive Woodland road section, where the zoning ordinance admits only the construction of individual homes. Located on two arteries of through motor traffic, it is often seen by the passing traveler.

CLYDE—The M. G. Hostetter house at the southeast corner of Fifth avenue and Clyde street marks the western boundary of the select Shadyside district along Fifth avenue. From this point to Wilkins avenue the mansions retain an unbroken front.

OWNERS FIGHT INVASION OF MODERN FLAT

Struggle to Keep District Strictly Residential May Endure for Years.

By M. V. BURGESS.

Pittsburgh has four exclusive residential districts in which the zoning ordinance permits only the construction of individual homes. Two of these are centered along Fifth avenue from Clyde street to Penn avenue, and retain to Fifth avenue the prestige of showing to the traveler some of Pittsburgh's finest homes.

The zoning map shows in white the select districts of Schenley Farms, Murdoch Farms and the adjoining Aylesboro avenue and Bartlett street section; Shadyside, including Wallingford street on the north and Forbes street on the south, and the Beechwood boulevard-Woodland road district, the latter two along Fifth avenue.

What will be the fate of the fine old homes of Fifth avenue? They have been preserved thus far through the protection of the zoning ordinance and the belligerent attitude of property owners, who have fought a number of cases in court to keep out apartments and semi-commercial buildings.

Along Fifth avenue from Clyde street to Penn avenue, there are at least a dozen large mansions on the market at the present time. The asking prices range from $75,000 to $300,000. The majority of these houses are forced on the market in order to settle estates.

ASSESSMENT HIGH

The average assessment along Fifth avenue, recently raised, runs from $250 to $350 a front foot. It costs real money to carry this sort of property, especially when it can be put to no other use than the location of single family homes.

The situation, then, is a struggle. On one side is heard the voice of practical business demanding that the properties be improved with apartment and commercial buildings, to the highest utility of which the land is capable.

On the other is the voice of civic pride and sentiment, demanding that the beauty of Pittsburgh's most distinguished street be preserved. Thus far the victory has been with the defenders of Fifth avenue. The indications are that the conflict will go on for a long time to come.

Taking up Fifth avenue in detail, we find that from Clyde to Devonshire streets both sides of the avenue are rated class "B" residential by the zoning ordinance. Class "B" is applied to a district in which may be built only one-family and two-family dwellings.

From Devonshire street to Wilkins avenue, both sides of Fifth avenue are class "C" residential, class "C" being the rating for individual residential property. There Fifth avenue cuts through the center of the Shadyside district.

On the left hand side of Fifth avenue going east from Wilkins avenue, the property is all class "B." On the right hand side, it is class "B" from Wilkins avenue to Maryland avenue. There the individual district begins again and the "C" rating extends to and including Beechwood boulevard.

TOWN HOUSES FADE

Many of the houses on the market along Fifth avenue are the homes of owners who have moved to large country estates. The automobile has made the town house unnecessary in many cases, and the owner can live throughout the year in the country without inconvenience. The cost of keeping up an establishment, therefore, becomes an unnecessary item of expense.

Many of the older homes have become obsolete and lack the modern features which make a house comfortable. On the other hand, many cases are noted along Fifth avenue in which the old homes have been completely remodeled and are strictly up to the minute in their interior details.

There have been a number of changes along Fifth avenue in recent years. Edmund W. Mudge bought the former Lawrence Dilworth house at the southwest corner of Fifth and Morewood avenues, and replaced it with a fine stone mansion. J. H. Hill purchased a large brick residence, a part of the old Guffey holdings at 5045 Fifth avenue, razed the building, and put up a modern home.

A. M. Moreland bought the old S. L. Collard residence. He removed it, and built a home which is one of the show places of the district. The John Bindley residence, a representative home, opposite St. James street, was completely remodeled in recent years. The residence of Dr. William H. Mercur at 5244 Fifth avenue is undergoing elaborate alterations at thep resent time.

Directly across the street from these fine homes is the Lauxterman property, which was recently held to the strictly residential class after a spirited battle in court. The injustice of building an apartment opposite a fine home was pointed out in this case.

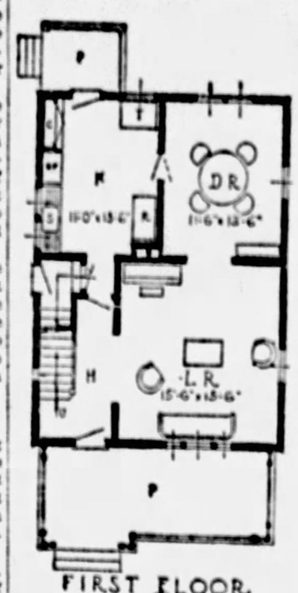
EXTERNALS DECEPTIVE

The old S. E. McCallen house at the northeast corner of Fifth and Aiken avenues was purchased by Mrs. J. A. Sutton and remodeled. A number of other Fifth avenue homes, which show the marks of age in their exterior appearance, are wonderful homes on the inside.

There are those who favor making Fifth avenue an apartment street, and while there are good arguments for this, there are also some potent objections. At present, the avenue carries four lanes of traffic, two each way. Park cars along Fifth avenue on either side, it is pointed out, the street cars must set the pace for the automobiles. This is scarcely a proper condition for an avenue flanked with apartments.

If the thoroughfare is widened and the zoning regulation changed, outer Fifth avenue may some day be Pittsburgh's greatest apartment street. As it stands today, it is the street to which we may point as an example of Pittsburgh's best residential property.

Clever Features in Frame Cottage



FIRST FLOOR

THE WARREN—

This home will provide for the comfort of a good-sized family. It has six rooms and one bath and its dimensions are 24x30 feet six inches. The spacious porch with latticed columns, the gabled roof and side dormer all add charm to the exterior. The rooms are of ample size for the proper location of furniture, and plenty of closet space has been provided. A cellar grade door gives access to both kitchen and basement. The kitchen is large and the plumbing is well arranged. The house is of the reception hall type. There are three good-sized bedrooms on the second floor. This plan is prepared by the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association of Pennsylvania, 730 Park Building, Pittsburgh.

Invite Realty Boards To Hear Heeren Talk

The Pittsburgh Real Estate Board has invited the East Boroughs, the North Boroughs, the McKeesport and the New Kensington realty boards to attend a special meeting, February 21, at the William Penn Hotel, arranged for William E. Heeren, director of the extension department of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Mr. Heeren is engaged in visiting real estate boards throughout the country and telling what the national organization is doing. He gathers sales data and assists realtors in analysing their problems in the light of successful operations in other parts of the country.

James C. Wilson, president of the Pittsburgh board, has been appointed district governor of the second district of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association, including the Pittsburgh, McKeesport, New Kensington, North Boroughs and East Boroughs boards. H. B. King, president of the state association, made the appointment. A group convention will be arranged this spring, at which the boards of Allegheny county will discuss local problems.

The luncheon of the board next Tuesday at noon in the William Penn Hotel will be followed by an address from Arthur V. Snell, secretary and manager of the Chamber of Commerce, who will speak on "Selling Pittsburgh to the World."

RECEIVES SHOP BUILDING BIDS

Edward C. Ball is receiving bids for a three-story brick and steel store and apartment building at the northwest corner of Penn and St. Clair streets, East Liberty. The building will be constructed on 146x74 feet. There will be five shops fronting on Penn avenue, and the main entrance to the apartments will be on St. Clair street.

SOLID CONSTRUCTION WITH LESS LABOR

"Honor Bilt" Ready-Cut homes are built on the money saving, skyscraper construction principles. Have you ever viewed a skyscraper in the course of construction? Weren't you impressed with the orderly manner with which all beams were swung into place—no confusion—no cutting? This careful cutting and fitting of material before it is delivered on the job, whether it be steel or lumber, not only saves the cost of skilled labor, but makes for stronger and more solid construction. "Honor Bilt" homes are furnished ready-cut. They are cut to fit accurately by expert mechanics and modern machinery in our own factories. By actual certified test, we know our system saves nearly one-half the labor and insures a better job. Moreover, our "Honor Bilt" system of construction insures homes that are solid, durable, warm and permanent.

SAVE $500.00 to $2,000.00

41,200 "Honor Bilt" Homes Today

Over 29,300 have been erected by the owners themselves. "Honor Bilt" homes are easy to build. With each house we furnish free a complete set of plans and a booklet which explains and illustrates the simple system. We ship you all material (except masonry materials) for a complete house, including lumber, millwork, roofing, building paper, paint and varnish and hardware; also, plumbing, heating and lighting fixtures. One order brings it all.

The Best Easy Payment Plan —Low Interest Charge

All you may require is a Building Lot and a little money to help pay some of the labor. Sears, Roebuck and Co. will sell you on easy payments all materials and advance cash to pay for most of the labor, and give you a long time to pay. A small payment each month as you would pay rent makes you the owner of a good substantial modern home in a few years. Your interest becomes less each time you make a payment. Our EASY PAYMENT plan has enabled thousands of families to own their own home in a short time.

Highest Quality Material

The lumber furnished for "Honor Bilt" homes is bright and new, fine, dry No. 1 framing, clear Cypress for outside finish, and clear siding. Expert mechanics, modern machinery and good materials insure perfectly made millwork. Oak, Birch, Fir or Yellow Pine (as specified) for interior finish—the kind of material that will prove to be a little better than generally used in home construction.

"Honor Bilt" Homes are being built in the largest cities. They meet with the Codes of the Bureau of Standards, U. S. Government. Note: We are prepared to meet the building code of any city where frame houses are built, usually without additional cost to our customers.

Whisky Drinking Quickly Stopped

Clever Wife Saves Husband

You Can Try It Free

Would you have left him? Read how one woman's superb love and wisdom conquered the curse for all women.

The figurative but typical experience of Mrs. A., related below, and the other cases which follow, have been duplicated almost daily by many women who have summoned the superb moral courage of their sex and won dramatic victories from the demon of drink.

Mrs. A., "strikingly beautiful with the poignant, glorified look that suffering and victory lend to mere prettiness."

No wonder he worships her. Yet she did nothing that another woman may not do . . . and that, before such tragic depths are reached.

Surely sorrow could never touch this exquisite creature!

Wealth and leisure. Clubs and drinking. So often, this is the downward start.

"Polite" dissipation eventually leads to this sort of thing . . . then scandal . . . failure.

The ultimate end . . . but for a woman's love and wisdom which made it a new beginning.

Sobered, anxious to begin over, he found friendly hands outstretched to help.

The recent merger of two great corporations finds him their united head, rich, respected, self-respecting.

"Among the guests of note at last night's reception was the beautiful Mrs. A. whose brilliant entertaining of a few years ago.."

Thus a recent society item, in a great mid-west daily, vividly recalls the romantic flame of a life such as fairy tales are made of: A young wife, beautiful, courted, mistress of palatial town and country houses, pampered with every luxury and attention that a young man of wealth could shower upon his much-loved wife: Reduced to beggary.

By his financial genius her young husband had amassed a fortune before he was thirty. Ten years later his equally spectacular debauchery brought on a crash in Wall Street that is still discussed where monied men meet.

Yet now Mrs. A. has returned to her rightful place in society. What miracle has happened? By what means could such broken lives be restored? Mr. A.'s only answer is that he "quit drinking and got back to work—no miracle in that!" But we who know anything about the habits of drunkards know some miracle is necessary to break that vicious habit and enable a man to function in the old brilliant way.

But let Mrs. A. tell her own story, as she was induced to do on the plea that it would help other women, today, to need any particular description. Many a wife or mother will recognize the picture with an aching heart.

Millionaire at 28, Beggar at 38

"My husband had applied himself so single-mindedly to building up his fortune that, with the fortune made, he was like a boy out of school—hardly knew what to do with himself. Naturally, he got to spending much of his time at the clubs, playing golf and poker, and, of course, drinking with other men like himself.

"Both of us drank too much: I realize that now. But liquors are served everywhere, like water—you know how it is! I shudder when I see young people, yes and older ones, too, drifting into the same swift current that swept us away so suddenly.

"Sometimes I worried a bit. But Hal always said impatiently that he knew when to quit. And now that he'd made his money, why shouldn't we go along with the crowd and have all the fun there was? I didn't dream that the habit was gripping poor Hal, unfitting his mind for business decisions, leading him on into wilder orgies, until—"

Tears brimmed suddenly in Mrs. A.'s fine eyes as, with a tremendous effort at self-control she begged, "Please forgive me. This experience is still too fresh and painful to speak of lightly. For, as you know, we lost everything—everything! We found ourselves at last in one bare room—a nightmare of a place—and the rent not paid on that! Why," she whispered, tragically, "Hal had sold the very clothes off his back for liquor! He just couldn't quit. He didn't even try to work. He was literally drunk for years—ragged, unshaven, stupid—Oh, I can't talk of it!" she broke off, sobbing, as the bitter memories flooded back over her.

And, truth to tell, such details are all too familiar, or too closely suggestive of the trend in many a home

The "Magic Potion"

At last, with her beautiful face composed once more and her nose properly powdered, Mrs. A. resumed her story at the crucial, upward step: the moment of utter despair when she must either leave her husband or find some way of releasing him from the habit that had robbed him of will and of manhood.

"But how could I leave him to utter ruin?"—went on the lovely voice. "I loved him—the real him, that is! What to do: what to do!

"One blessed day I recalled an old school friend who had specialized in chemistry. Dear old Bob! How we used to laugh at him, with his hair eternally rumpled and his spectacled eyes blind to everything but his beloved chemicals and test tubes. No one can ever know what it cost me to swallow my pride and go to him, destitute as I then was. But I was desperate. I begged him to make something, anything, that would take away the accursed taste for the accursed liquor," she said, with a little rippling laugh for her vehemence.

"Sure enough, Bob knew a man who had worked out just such a formula, and got some of the precious compound for me—pure magic it turned out to be! To this day Hal doesn't know what changed him. He just knows he never wants to taste liquor of any kind again. His former business associates, when they learned that he had sobered up, couldn't do enough to help him get a new start. And just look at us now—" she invited, proudly. "Suppose I had deserted him! Suppose I hadn't found the way to help him—!"

Yes, just look at them now. He, hardly more than fifty and rated a millionaire, for his "comeback" is considered one of the miracles of the financial world. She, still strikingly beautiful, with the poignant, glorified look that suffering and victory lend to mere prettiness. You would know these people if the name could be given. You do know of others so like them they might well be the same—except for the happy ending. Alas that there are not more such women in the world, translating their love and loyalty into action more effective than words.

Perhaps it's because more women do not know of the remedy. For what Mrs. A. calls her "magic potion" is in reality a perfectly simple scientific compound, available to any woman who wants it. Already amazing numbers of them seem to have discovered it, as shown by these happy little stories, the result of what is appropriately called the Golden Treatment. For instance, there is that of petite, golden-haired little Mrs. Richie Harris.

"No, thanks—I'm off that stuff"

Richie is one of those engaging young bond salesmen, climbing steadily up the money ladder, and immensely popular with every one. Too popular, when you consider the quantity of drinking that such popularity seems always to demand.

"Has Richie quit drinking?" laughed Mrs. Richie, as she proudly flashed a handsome new diamond. "Well, with the 'real stuff' at $12 a quart, what right would a poor little wife have to expect new jew-els?" she drawled whimsically. Then the twinkles sobered, "Yes, thank goodness, Richie has quit," she said. "He was drinking too much. It was getting the best of him. But he wouldn't listen to me. Laughingly said, 'he knew his bootleggers!'

"So when Dave Barrow quit—broke off cold—I paid Betty Barrow a call. Had an awful time worming the secret from her!" with a sly smile. "But finally Betty gave me some perfectly harmless looking white powder and told me to mash it in with Richie's potatoes—you've no idea how fearful I felt doing it! But I just had to do something!—that awful bootleg was simply poisoning my nice boy.

"At first nothing seem to happen. Then one day Richie said, with the most noble, self-righteous air imaginable—as though he had done it all by himself—'Guess you're right, Mib's. I'm cutting out the drinks!' And he did. Won't touch a drop any more. When we're out, evenings, I almost burst with pride the way he throws out his chest and says, 'No, thanks, I'm off that stuff!' And you should see how much better he looks, already!"

Happy Home Regained

Not only does the habit of drink lower a man's or a woman's physical resistance, leaving them open to disease and not so alert mentally, but its cost usually deprives the family of the very necessities of life. Children are all too often cheated of their rightful opportunities because of the cost of a father's seemingly moderate drinking, or of its effect on his earning capacity. It is in such homes, homes that by every right should be ideally happy, that irritability and strife creep in.

Mrs. Dave Barrow laughed happily when the subject was mentioned to her. "Has Dave quit drinking? He certainly has. And this is one happy family in consequence.

"Dave is the sweetest old thing in the world—when he's sober! But this awful bootleg—it's enough to sour anybody's disposition. We quarrelled rather a lot, I'm afraid: especially after little Betty came and I just couldn't make ends meet on Dave's salary any more.

"One day I read that bootleggers had paid nearly six millions of dollars in income taxes in one year. Think of that! Six million dollars just in taxes—and my precious little one without decent clothes! I just put on my hat and hurried down to our old family doctor, and asked him if there wasn't some way to make Dave Barrow quit drinking, and he said, 'Why, dear me, haven't you ever heard of the Golden Treatment?'"

Strange, that a remedy so effective and so desperately needed in these days should not be universally known. The reason may be that women use it secretly and, like Mrs. Barrow, hesitate telling lest it get back to husband's ears. For men like to think they have done the swearing off by themselves. Yet how impossible it seems for them to do so.

Prison Loomed for this Lad

Bad as is the habit for adults, what about our youth? Are they to go on ruining their health with vile, poisonous bootleg? Acquiring a habit that grows beyond human will or desire to control? Risking the tragedies that every day's paper reveals, of youths inflamed with bad liquor? Or shall the mothers take a hand, as did Mrs. Lott of Newark?

Bill Lott was just like a million other boys, not quite developed into manhood, full of life, hating restraint, and under the influence of a wild crowd. Naturally, he drank. And when he drank, he didn't quite know what he was doing.

"Bill had already gotten into several serious escapades, such as petty thieving and property damaging and we knew he was being watched by the police," said his mother. "Yet he's a good boy at heart, and when told of his misdeeds would be wild with grief and promise never to touch another drink. But the stuff was stronger than he. We lived in daily terror of what he might do next; of what the end would be for our precious lad.

"In desperation I answered a tiny advertisement in our home paper, describing a Golden Treatment which would stop drinking. I got some of it, dissolving it in Bill's coffee as directed. That night he came home sober—blessed miracle! So I continued using the treatment. And surely a golden treatment it proved to be. Our boy has entirely broken with the old crowd. Seems never to want a drink any more. And is so business-like and manly I could weep for very joy at the transformation. How I long to tell other mothers of other boys who are swiftly heading for disaster!"

Drunken Drivers Crash

One of the most deplorable results of modern drinking is the way it has gripped young womanhood. To whom shall the world look for goodness and ideals when our women are debauched? And what can the future hold for them when the present fling has run its course? Only sorrow and hopelessness! Of course, your girl is different. But if she drinks, as nearly all girls do to some extent, the consequences are liable to be beyond her control. Our prisons are full of girls of fine parentage and training whose miss-steps under the influence of liquor have resulted in permanent wreckage of their lives. Here is but one phase of the dangers.

"I lived in hourly dread," writes a typical mother, "of Betty wrecking the car, killing someone, when she had been drinking. She's so full of life and enthusiasm, anyhow, that a little drink always set her to speeding. And with even the girls' teas serving liquor these days, I never knew what might happen, when she was not at home.

"I cannot be thankful enough that I learned of the Golden Treatment. Now I can trust Betty anywhere, for she doesn't touch liquor of any kind. And, oh, what a happy change has come over her disposition."

They Can't Quit—You Must Help

The bitter fact is that those who drink could not quit if they wanted to. They think they could. But they do not, because they cannot. The taste for liquor becomes irresistible. The temptation is on every hand. If loved ones are to be saved they must be saved by the women—the wives and mothers.

Analysis proves there is nothing in this Golden Treatment that could affect the system in any way. In fact, it is not absorbed by the system. It is simply a colorless powder that, taken in food, reacts against liquor of any kind. The two acids simply do not harmonize. And, the powder being absolutely tasteless, the patient need never know the reason why he, or she, quits drinking. But he quits: she quits. And soon.

For the sake of your loved ones, find out more about this marvelous means of helping them. Drinking today is dangerous as it never was before. You cannot afford to risk the results of even moderate drinking. Right now—now that you know the remedy—try this simple method that has brought safety and happiness to so many other households.

Send for Sample At Once

The maker of Golden Treatment has agreed to send to any of our readers a free sample of the powder and full information regarding it, so you can see for yourself just how simple and effective it is. We have arranged to have the package come to you in a plain wrapper so that no outsider will guess its message. All you need do to bring about in your home such happy miracles as these, is simply to fill in and mail this coupon, today. The answer will come, with its precious sample, within three or four days—if you get your coupon in before the supply is gone. Right now, fill in and mail it.

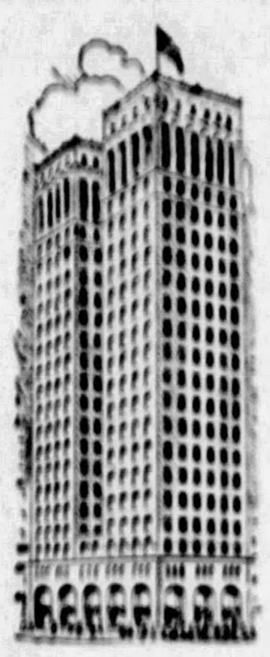
Law & Finance Building
4th Avenue & Cherry Way



Offices of High Values Moderate Rentals

By affording new offices (single and ensuite) of highest values at extremely moderate rentals, the Law & Finance building, Fourth ave. at Cherry way, establishes a precedent for the 1928 renting period. By comparison the advantages of this building for offices are outstandingly impressive.

COMPARISON INVITED

Inspect the building—get the facts—make comparison—then the claim to leadership of the Law & Finance building among new office buildings will be admitted. Contributing to this leadership is a service to tenants exemplary in character and execution. Building ready before May 1st.

LINOLEUM COVERED FLOORS—PARTITIONING AND ELECTRIC CURRENT IN RENTAL COST.

Dear Sir:—Recently I inserted a three-day ad in your paper for the sale of a Radio.

The ad was in the paper Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and on the first day, Monday, I received at least ten answers to this ad. I sold the Radio before the ad appeared in the paper the following day.

From the results obtained, I will rely on the Sun-Tele as my future advertising medium.

Manorial Air Clings to Homes of Upper Fifth Ave.

Representative Pittsburgh Homes Maintain Beauty of Exclusive Fifth Avenue Districts

BEECHWOOD—The W. J. Guthrie house at the southwest corner of Fifth avenue and Beechwood boulevard is on the eastern boundary of the exclusive Woodland road section, where the zoning ordinance admits only the construction of individual homes. Located on two arteries of through motor traffic, it is often seen by the passing traveler.

CLYDE—The M. G. Hostetter house at the southeast corner of Fifth avenue and Clyde street marks the western boundary of the select Shadyside district along Fifth avenue. From this point to Wilkins avenue the mansions retain an unbroken front.

OWNERS FIGHT INVASION OF MODERN FLAT

Struggle to Keep District Strictly Residential May Endure for Years.

By M. V. BURGESS.

Pittsburgh has four exclusive residential districts in which the zoning ordinance permits only the construction of individual homes. Two of these are centered along Fifth avenue from Clyde street to Penn avenue, and retain to Fifth avenue the prestige of showing to the traveler some of Pittsburgh's finest homes.

The zoning map shows in white the select districts of Schenley Farms, Murdoch Farms and the adjoining Aylesboro avenue and Hartlett street section; Shadyside, including Wallingford street on the north and Forbes street on the south, and the Beechwood boulevard-Woodland road district, the latter two along Fifth avenue.

What will be the fate of the fine old homes of Fifth Avenue? They have been preserved thus far through the protection of the zoning ordinance and the belligerent attitude of property owners, who have fought a number of cases in court to keep out apartments and semi-commercial buildings.

Along Fifth avenue from Clyde street to Penn avenue, there are at least a dozen large mansions on the market at the present time. The asking prices range from $75,000 to $200,000. The majority of these houses are forced on the market in order to settle estates.

ASSESSMENT HIGH

The average assessment along Fifth avenue, recently raised, runs from $250 to $350 a front foot. It costs real money to carry this sort of property, especially when it can be put to no other use than the location of single family homes.

The situation, then, is a struggle. On one side is heard the voice of practical business demanding that the properties be improved with apartment and commercial buildings, to the highest utility of which the land is capable.

On the other is the voice of civic pride and sentiment, demanding that the beauty of Pittsburgh's most distinguished street be preserved. Thus far the victory has been with the defenders of Fifth avenue. The indications are that the conflict will go on for a long time to come.

Taking up Fifth avenue in detail, we find that from Clyde to Devonshire streets both sides of the avenue are rated class "B" residential by the zoning ordinance. Class "B" is applied to a district in which may be built only one-family and two-family dwellings.

From Devonshire street to Wilkins avenue, both sides of Fifth avenue are class "C" residential, class "C" being the rating for individual residential property. There Fifth avenue cuts through the center of the Shadyside district.

On the left hand side of Fifth avenue going east from Wilkins avenue, the property is all class "B." On the right hand side, it is class "B" from Wilkins avenue to Maryland avenue. There the individual district begins again and the "C" rating extends to and including Beechwood boulevard.

TOWN HOUSES FADE

Many of the houses on the market along Fifth avenue are the homes of owners who have moved to large country estates. The automobile has made the town house unnecessary in many cases, and the owner can live throughout the year in the country without inconvenience. The cost of keeping up an establishment, therefore, becomes an unnecessary item of expense.

Many of the older homes have become obsolete and lack the modern features which make a house comfortable. On the other hand, many cases are noted along Fifth avenue in which the old homes have been completely remodeled and are strictly up to the minute in their interior details.

There have been a number of changes along Fifth avenue in recent years. Edmund W. Mudge bought the former Lawrence Dilworth house at the southwest corner of Fifth and Morewood avenues, and replaced it with a fine stone mansion. J. H. Hill purchased a large brick residence, a part of the old Guffey holdings at 5045 Fifth avenue, razed the building, and put up a modern home.

A. M. Moreland bought the old S. L. Collard residence. He removed it, and built a home which is one of the show places of the district. The John Bindley residence, a representative home, opposite St. James street, was completely remodeled in recent years. The residence of Dr. William H. Mercur at 5244 Fifth avenue is undergoing elaborate alterations at thep resent time.

Directly across the street from these fine homes is the Lauxterman property, which was recently held to the strictly residential class after a spirited battle in court. The injustice of building an apartment opposite a fine home was pointed out in this case.

EXTERNALS DECEPTIVE

The old S. E. McCallen house at the northeast corner of Fifth and Aiken avenues was purchased by Mrs. J. A. Sutton and remodeled. A number of other Fifth avenue homes, which show the marks of age in their exterior appearance, are wonderful homes on the inside.

There are those who favor making Fifth avenue an apartment street, and while there are good arguments for this, there are also some potent objections. At present, the avenue carries four lanes of traffic, two each way. Park cars along Fifth avenue on either side, it is pointed out, the street cars must set the pace for the automobiles. This is scarcely a proper condition for an avenue flanked with apartments.

If the thoroughfare is widened and the zoning regulation changed, outer Fifth avenue may some day be Pittsburgh's greatest apartment street. As it stands today, it is the street to which we may point as an example of Pittsburgh's best residential property.

Clever Features in Frame Cottage

THE WARREN—

This home will provide for the comfort of a good-sized family. It has six rooms and one bath and its dimensions are 24x30 feet six inches. The spacious porch with latticed columns, the gabled roof and side dormer all add charm to the exterior. The rooms are of ample size for the proper location of furniture, and plenty of closet space has been provided. A cellar grade door gives access to both kitchen and basement. The kitchen is large and the plumbing is well arranged. The house is of the reception hall type. There are three good-sized bedrooms on the second floor. This plan is prepared by the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association of Pennsylvania, 730 Park Building, Pittsburgh.

Invite Realty Boards To Hear Heeren Talk

The Pittsburgh Real Estate Board has invited the East Boroughs, the North Boroughs, the McKeesport and the New Kensington realty boards to attend a special meeting, February 21, at the William Penn Hotel, arranged for William E. Heeren, director of the extension department of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Mr. Heeren is engaged in visiting real estate boards throughout the country and telling what the national organization is doing. He gathers sales data and assists realtors in analysing their problems in the light of successful operations in other parts of the country.

James C. Wilson, president of the Pittsburgh board, has been appointed district governor of the second district of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association, including the Pittsburgh, McKeesport, New Kensington, North Boroughs and East Boroughs boards. H. B. King, president of the state association, made the appointment. A group convention will be arranged this spring, at which the boards of Allegheny county will discuss local problems.

The luncheon of the board next Tuesday at noon in the William Penn Hotel will be followed by an address from Arthur V. Snell, secretary and manager of the Chamber of Commerce, who will speak on "Selling Pittsburgh to the World."

RECEIVES SHOP BUILDING BIDS

Edward C. Ball is receiving bids for a three-story brick and steel store and apartment building at the northwest corner of Penn and St. Clair streets, East Liberty. The building will be constructed on 146x74 feet. There will be five shops fronting on Penn avenue, and the main entrance to the apartments will be on St. Clair street.

SOLID CONSTRUCTION WITH LESS LABOR

"Honor Bilt" Ready-Cut homes are built on the money saving, skyscraper construction principles. Have you ever viewed a skyscraper in the course of construction? Weren't you impressed with the orderly manner with which all beams were swung into place—no confusion—no cutting? This careful cutting and fitting of material before it is delivered on the job, whether it be steel or lumber, not only saves the cost of skilled labor, but makes for stronger and more solid construction. "Honor Bilt" homes are furnished ready-cut. They are cut to fit accurately by expert mechanics and modern machinery in our own factories. By actual certified test, we know our system saves nearly one-half the labor and insures a better job. Moreover, our "Honor Bilt" system of construction insures homes that are solid, durable, warm and permanent.

SAVE $500.00 to $2,000.00

41,200 "Honor Bilt" Homes Today

Over 29,300 have been erected by the owners themselves. "Honor Bilt" homes are easy to build. With each house we furnish free a complete set of plans and a booklet which explains and illustrates the simple system. We ship you all material (except masonry materials) for a complete house, including lumber, millwork, roofing, building paper, paint and varnish and hardware; also, plumbing, heating and lighting fixtures. One order brings it all.

The Best Easy Payment Plan —Low Interest Charge

All you may require is a Building Lot and a little money to help pay some of the labor. Sears, Roebuck and Co. will sell you on easy payments all materials and advance cash to pay for most of the labor, and give you a long time to pay. A small payment each month as you would pay rent makes you the owner of a good substantial modern home in a few years. Your interest becomes less each time you make a payment. Our EASY PAYMENT plan has enabled thousands of families to own their own home in a short time.

Highest Quality Material

The lumber furnished for "Honor Bilt" homes is bright and new, fine, dry No. 1 framing, clear Cypress for outside finish, and clear siding. Expert mechanics, modern machinery and good materials insure perfectly made millwork. Oak, Birch, Fir or Yellow Pine (as specified) for interior finish—the kind of material that will prove to be a little better than generally used in home construction.

"Honor Bilt" Homes are being built in the largest cities. They meet with the Codes of the Bureau of Standards, U. S. Government. Note: We are prepared to meet the building code of any city where frame houses are built, usually without additional cost to our customers.

Special Service

We assist you from the start until the last nail is driven. You have the service of our entire organization, including architects, field inspectors and building experts. In addition, you have the benefit of our accumulated experience, covering the erection of over 41,200 "Honor Bilt" homes. You have this valuable service without any additional charge. Manufacturing enormous quantities of building material in our huge factories lowers cost.

You can build more economically, more quickly and at rock bottom cost by taking advantage of our offer. Get the facts! Call, phone or write.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

When you consider that our experience covers a period of over twenty-five years, and cumulative knowledge of our staff includes every detail of home building, Sears surely is a safe place to select your home. Whisky Drinking Quickly Stopped

Clever Wife Saves Husband

You Can Try It Free

Would you have left him? Read how one woman's superb love and wisdom conquered the curse for all women.

The figurative but typical experience of Mrs. A., related below, and the other cases which follow, have been duplicated almost daily by many women who have summoned the superb moral courage of their sex and won dramatic victories from the demon of drink.

Surely sorrow could never touch this exquisite creature!

Wealth and leisure. Clubs and drinking. So often, this is the downward start.

"Polite" dissipation eventually leads to this sort of thing . . . then scandal . . . failure.

The ultimate end . . . but for a woman's love and wisdom which made it a new beginning.

Sobered, anxious to begin over, he found friendly hands outstretched to help.

The recent merger of two great corporations finds him their united head, rich, respected, self-respecting.

No wonder he worships her. Yet she did nothing that another woman may not do . . . and that, before such tragic depths are reached.

Mrs. A., "strikingly beautiful with the poignant, glorified look that suffering and victory lend to mere prettiness."

"Among the guests of note at last night's reception was the beautiful Mrs. A. whose brilliant entertaining of a few years ago.."

Thus a recent society item, in a great mid-west daily, vividly recalls the romantic flame of a life such as fairy tales are made of: A young wife, beautiful, courted, mistress of palatial town and country houses, pampered with every luxury and attention that a young man of wealth could shower upon his much-loved wife: Reduced to beggary.

By his financial genius her young husband had amassed a fortune before he was thirty. Ten years later his equally spectacular debauchery brought on a crash in Wall Street that is still discussed where monied men meet.

Yet now Mrs. A. has returned to her rightful place in society. What miracle has happened? By what means could such broken lives be restored? Mr. A.'s only answer is that he "quit drinking and got back to work—no miracle in that!" But we who know anything about the habits of drunkards know some miracle is necessary to break that vicious habit and enable a man to function in the old brilliant way.

But let Mrs. A. tell her own story, as she was induced to do on the plea that it would help other women.

Millionaire at 28, Beggar at 38

"My husband had applied himself so single-mindedly to building up his fortune that, with the fortune made, he was like a boy out of school—hardly knew what to do with himself. Naturally, he got to spending much of his time at the clubs, playing golf and poker, and, of course, drinking with other men like himself.

"Both of us drank too much: I realize that now. But liquors are served everywhere, like water—you know how it is! I shudder when I see young people, yes and older ones, too, drifting into the same swift current that swept us away so suddenly.

"Sometimes I worried a bit. But Hal always said impatiently that he knew when to quit. And now that he'd made his money, why shouldn't we go along with the crowd and have all the fun there was? I didn't dream that the habit was gripping poor Hal, unfitting his mind for business decisions, leading him on into wilder orgies, until—"

Tears brimmed suddenly in Mrs. A.'s fine eyes as, with a tremendous effort at self-control she begged, "Please forgive me. This experience is still too fresh and painful to speak of lightly. For, as you know, we lost everything—everything! We found ourselves at last in one bare room—a nightmare of a place—and the rent not paid on that! Why," she whispered, tragically, "Hal had sold the very clothes off his back for liquor! He just couldn't quit. He didn't even try to work. He was literally drunk for years—ragged, unshaven, stupid—Oh, I can't talk of it!" she broke off, sobbing, as the bitter memories flooded back over her.

And, truth to tell, such details are all too familiar, or too closely suggestive of the trend in many a home today, to need any particular description. Many a wife or mother will recognize the picture with an aching heart.

The "Magic Potion"

At last, with her beautiful face composed once more and her nose properly powdered, Mrs. A. resumed her story at the crucial, upward step: the moment of utter despair when she must either leave her husband or find some way of releasing him from the habit that had robbed him of will and of manhood.

"But how could I leave him to utter ruin?"—went on the lovely voice. "I loved him—the real him, that is! What to do: what to do!

"One blessed day I recalled an old school friend who had specialized in chemistry. Dear old Bob! How we used to laugh at him, with his hair eternally rumpled and his spectacled eyes blind to everything but his beloved chemicals and test tubes. No one can ever know what it cost me to swallow my pride and go to him, destitute as I then was. But I was desperate. I begged him to make something, anything, that would take away the accursed taste for the accursed liquor," she said, with a little rippling laugh for her vehemence.

"Sure enough, Bob knew a man who had worked out just such a formula, and got some of the precious compound for me—pure magic it turned out to be! To this day Hal doesn't know what changed him. He just knows he never wants to taste liquor of any kind again. His former business associates, when they learned that he had sobered up, couldn't do enough to help him get a new start. And just look at us now—" she invited, proudly. "Suppose I had deserted him! Suppose I hadn't found the way to help him—!"

Yes, just look at them now. He, hardly more than fifty and rated a millionaire, for his "comeback" is considered one of the miracles of the financial world. She, still strikingly beautiful, with the poignant, glorified look that suffering and victory lend to mere prettiness. You would know these people if the name could be given. You do know of others so like them they might well be the same—except for the happy ending. Alas that there are not more such women in the world, translating their love and loyalty into action more effective than words.

Perhaps it's because more women do not know of the remedy. For what Mrs. A. calls her "magic potion" is in reality a perfectly simple scientific compound, available to any woman who wants it. Already amazing numbers of them seem to have discovered it, as shown by these happy little stories, the result of what is appropriately called the Golden Treatment. For instance, there is that of petite, golden-haired little Mrs. Richie Harris.

"No, thanks—I'm off that stuff"

Richie is one of those engaging young bond salesmen, climbing steadily up the money ladder, and

immensely popular with every one. Too popular, when you consider the quantity of drinking that such popularity seems always to demand.

"Has Richie quit drinking?" laughed Mrs. Richie, as she proudly flashed a handsome new diamond. "Well, with the 'real stuff' at $12 a quart, what right would a poor little wife have to expect new jew-els?" she drawled whimsically. Then the twinkles sobered, "Yes, thank goodness, Richie has quit," she said. "He was drinking too much. It was getting the best of him. But he wouldn't listen to me. Laughingly said, 'he knew his bootleggers!'

"So when Dave Barrow quit—broke off cold—I paid Betty Barrow a call. Had an awful time worming the secret from her!" with a sly smile. "But finally Betty gave me some perfectly harmless looking white powder and told me to mash it in with Richie's potatoes—you've no idea how fearful I felt doing it! But I just had to do something!—that awful bootleg was simply poisoning my nice boy.

"At first nothing seem to happen. Then one day Richie said, with the most noble, self-righteous air imaginable—as though he had done it all by himself—'Guess you're right, Mib's. I'm cutting out the drinks!' And he did. Won't touch a drop any more. When we're out, evenings, I almost burst with pride the way he throws out his chest and says, 'No, thanks, I'm off that stuff!' And you should see how much better he looks, already!"

Happy Home Regained

Not only does the habit of drink lower a man's or a woman's physical resistance, leaving them open to disease and not so alert mentally, but its cost usually deprives the family of the very necessities of life. Children are all too often cheated of their rightful opportunities because of the cost of a father's seemingly moderate drinking, or of its effect on his earning capacity. It is in such homes, homes that by every right should be ideally happy, that irritability and strife creep in.

Mrs. Dave Barrow laughed happily when the subject was mentioned to her. "Has Dave quit drinking? He certainly has. And this is one happy family in consequence.

"Dave is the sweetest old thing in the world—when he's sober! But this awful bootleg—it's enough to sour anybody's disposition. We quarrelled rather a lot, I'm afraid: especially after little Betty came and I just couldn't make ends meet on Dave's salary any more.

"One day I read that bootleggers had paid nearly six millions of dollars in income taxes in one year. Think of that! Six million dollars just in taxes—and my precious little one without decent clothes! I just put on my hat and hurried down to our old family doctor, and asked him if there wasn't some way to make Dave Barrow quit drinking, and he said, 'Why, dear me, haven't you ever heard of the Golden Treatment?'"

Strange, that a remedy so effective and so desperately needed in these days should not be universally known. The reason may be that women use it secretly and, like Mrs. Barrow, hesitate telling lest it get back to husband's ears. For men like to think they have done the swearing off by themselves. Yet how impossible it seems for them to do so.

Prison Loomed for this Lad

Bad as is the habit for adults, what about our youth? Are they to go on ruining their health with vile, poisonous bootleg? Acquiring a habit that grows beyond human will or desire to control? Risking the tragedies that every day's paper reveals, of youths inflamed with bad liquor? Or shall the mothers take a hand, as did Mrs. Lott of Newark?

Bill Lott was just like a million other boys, not quite developed into manhood, full of life, hating restraint, and under the influence of a wild crowd. Naturally, he drank. And when he drank, he didn't quite know what he was doing.

"Bill had already gotten into several serious escapades, such as petty thieving and property damaging and we knew he was being watched by the police," said his mother. "Yet he's a good boy at heart, and when told of his misdeeds would be wild with grief and promise never to touch another drink. But the stuff was stronger than he. We lived in daily terror of what he might do next; of what the end would be for our precious lad.

permanent wreckage of their lives. Here is but one phase of the dangers.

"I lived in hourly dread," writes a typical mother, "of Betty wrecking the car, killing someone, when she had been drinking. She's so full of life and enthusiasm, anyhow, that a little drink always set her to speeding. And with even the girls' teas serving liquor these days, I never knew what might happen, when she was not at home.

"I cannot be thankful enough that I learned of the Golden Treatment. Now I can trust Betty anywhere, for she doesn't touch liquor of any kind. And, oh, what a happy change has come over her disposition."

They Can't Quit—You Must Help

The bitter fact is that those who drink could not quit if they wanted to. They think they could. But they do not, because they cannot. The taste for liquor becomes irresistible. The temptation is on every hand. If loved ones are to be saved they must be saved by the women—the wives and mothers.

Analysis proves there is nothing in this Golden Treatment that could affect the system in any way. In fact, it is not absorbed by the system. It is simply a colorless powder that, taken in food, reacts against liquor of any kind. The two acids simply do not harmonize. And, the powder being absolutely tasteless, the patient need never know the reason why he, or she, quits drinking. But he quits: she quits. And soon.

For the sake of your loved ones, find out more about this marvelous means of helping them. Drinking today is dangerous as it never was before. You cannot afford to risk the results of even moderate drinking. Right now—now that you know the remedy—try this simple method that has brought safety and happiness to so many other households.

The maker of Golden Treatment has agreed to send to any of our readers a free sample of the powder and full information regarding it, so you can see for yourself just how simple and effective it is. We have arranged to have the package come to you in a plain wrapper so that no outsider will guess its message. All you need do to bring about in your home such happy miracles as these, is simply to fill in and mail this coupon, today. The answer will come, with its precious sample, within three or four days—if you get your coupon in before the supply is gone. Right now, fill in and mail it.

"In desperation I answered a tiny advertisement in our home paper, describing a Golden Treatment which would stop drinking. I got some of it, dissolving it in Bill's coffee as directed. That night he came home sober—blessed miracle! So I continued using the treatment. And surely a golden treatment it proved to be. Our boy has entirely broken with the old crowd. Seems never to want a drink any more. And is so business-like and manly I could weep for very joy at the transformation. How I long to tell other mothers of other boys who are swiftly heading for disaster!"

Drunken Drivers Crash

One of the most deplorable results of modern drinking is the way it has gripped young womanhood. To whom shall the world look for goodness and ideals when our women are debauched? And what can the future hold for them when the present fling has run its course? Only sorrow and hopelessness! Of course, your girl is different. But if she drinks, as nearly all girls do to some extent, the consequences are liable to be beyond her control. Our prisons are full of girls of fine parentage and training whose miss-steps under the influence of liquor have resulted in

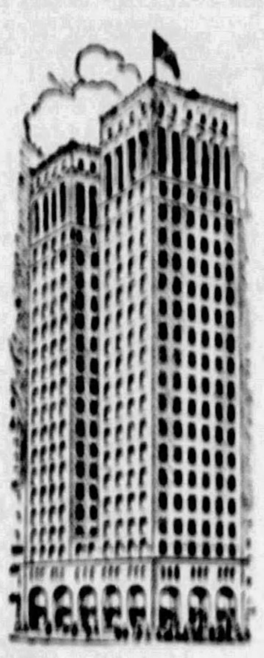
Law & Finance Building
4th Avenue & Cherry Way



Offices of High Values Moderate Rentals

By affording new offices (single and ensuite) of highest values at extremely moderate rentals, the Law & Finance building, Fourth ave. at Cherry way, establishes a precedent for the 1928 renting period. By comparison the advantages of this building for offices are outstandingly impressive.

COMPARISON INVITED

Inspect the building—get the facts—make comparison—then the claim to leadership of the Law & Finance building among new office buildings will be admitted. Contributing to this leadership is a service to tenants exemplary in character and execution. Building ready before May 1st.

Classified Manager,
The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Sir:—Recently I inserted a three-day ad in your paper for the sale of a Radio.

The ad was in the paper Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and on the first day, Monday, I received at least ten answers to this ad. I sold the Radio before the ad appeared in the paper the following day.

From the results obtained, I will rely on the Sun-Tele as my future advertising medium.

Sincerely,
MRS. J—— B——

The Great Victory Event.

175 Cars and Trucks

Frank D. Saupp Inc., Alway's Alert

February 12th to February 19th

Today opens another Great Event in history of Used Car Sales. Our last Used Car Sale, which was the biggest sale in our history, selling 163 Used Cars and Trucks in one week. The only reason this sale was such a success was that the public were given more value for their money and a better Used Car than they could buy elsewhere. You will find the same value at this Great Sale. Your car will be traded and we will give you low down payment on any car or truck in stock. Do not wait another day. Come to this great Sale and get a Used Car for less money than you will pay a month from now. Buy today and save $100 to $200 on a used car.

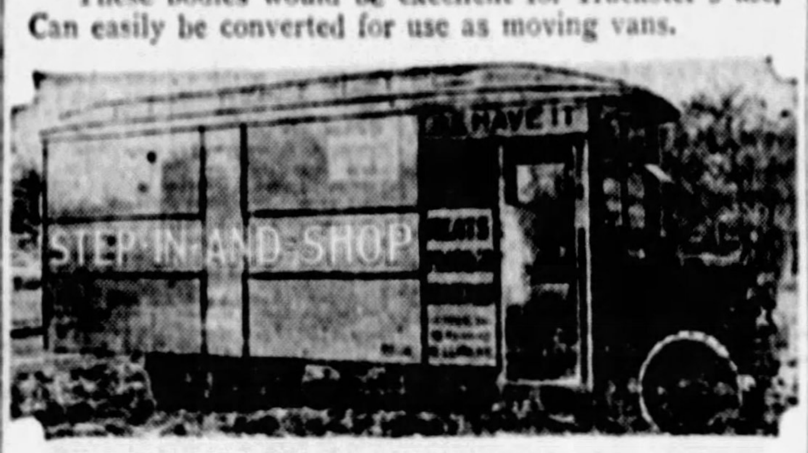
Quitting Business

Must sell at a sacrifice fleet of six motor trucks, 2 Garfords 4 ton, 3 Garfords 2½ ton, and one G M C 2½ ton, fully equipped with grocery type bodies (Step in and Shop), fitted up inside to carry complete line of groceries, vegetables, fruit, meats, including an ice box.

These bodies would be excellent for Huckster's use. Can easily be converted for use as moving vans.



This fleet must be disposed of quickly to stop storage charges and to close the business. Will sacrifice at a ridiculously low price for quick sale for cash. No reasonable offer refused. Trucks in good running condition ready for immediate delivery. Address

Five of the Minstrel Girls

IN THE CHORUS— St. Catherine's Church will stage its annual minstrel and revue Wednesday and Thursday nights in the auditorium of the South Hills High School. Among those who will take part, in addition to the girls above—Mary Davin, Rita Larkin, Eleanor Dunn, Anna Rourke and Margaret Barrett—are: Frank O'Brien, Joseph Greiner, Ernest Godino, Frank Leone, Jack Harkins, Joseph Dunn, James J. Duffy, Jerome Warnock, James Cantelli, Grace McBride, Eunice and Metrie Harkins, Kathleen Findley, Irene May Skaggs, Jean Duffy and Robert Warnock. Oscar Bergman is director.

BUILDERS PLAN BIG SHOW HERE

Sponsored by various local architects, Pittsburgh will soon have a permanent exhibit of all of the materials and equipment entering into the construction of homes, factories, theaters, garages and all other types of buildings. Exhibits of this kind are now successfully operating in other large cities, such as New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Cincinnati, and are patronized by architects, engineers, contractors, prospective home builders and the general building public.

Plans have been completed and display space rented by the Materials Exhibit Company, Room 600, 250 Fifth avenue, recently formed to handle all the details of this venture. Space will not be rented as the ordinary booth exhibit, but will be designed architecturally in the form of the rooms contained in the average residence, and in addition there will be the industrial or factory units.

100 at Alcoma Club For Stag Bridge

Nearly 100 members attended a stag bridge in the club house of the Alcoma Country Club Friday evening. This was the second of a series of bridge parties under the chairmanship of Robert J. Alderdice.

OUSTED POLICE MAY COME BACK

Two policemen, discharged February 1 after Marie Marlowe, alias Mary Abbott, 26, of 3148 McClure avenue, testified before the police trial board that they had accepted money and liquor from her for protection in soliciting, may be reinstated as a result of the woman's admission Saturday that she had "framed" the officers.

Patrolmen John Bowers and Elmer Homscher, who arrested Marie two weeks ago, were discharged as a result of her accusations. Friday night she was arrested again, and at a hearing in Morals Court told Magistrate A. D. Brandon that she had lied in her previous statements, and that the officers were innocent.

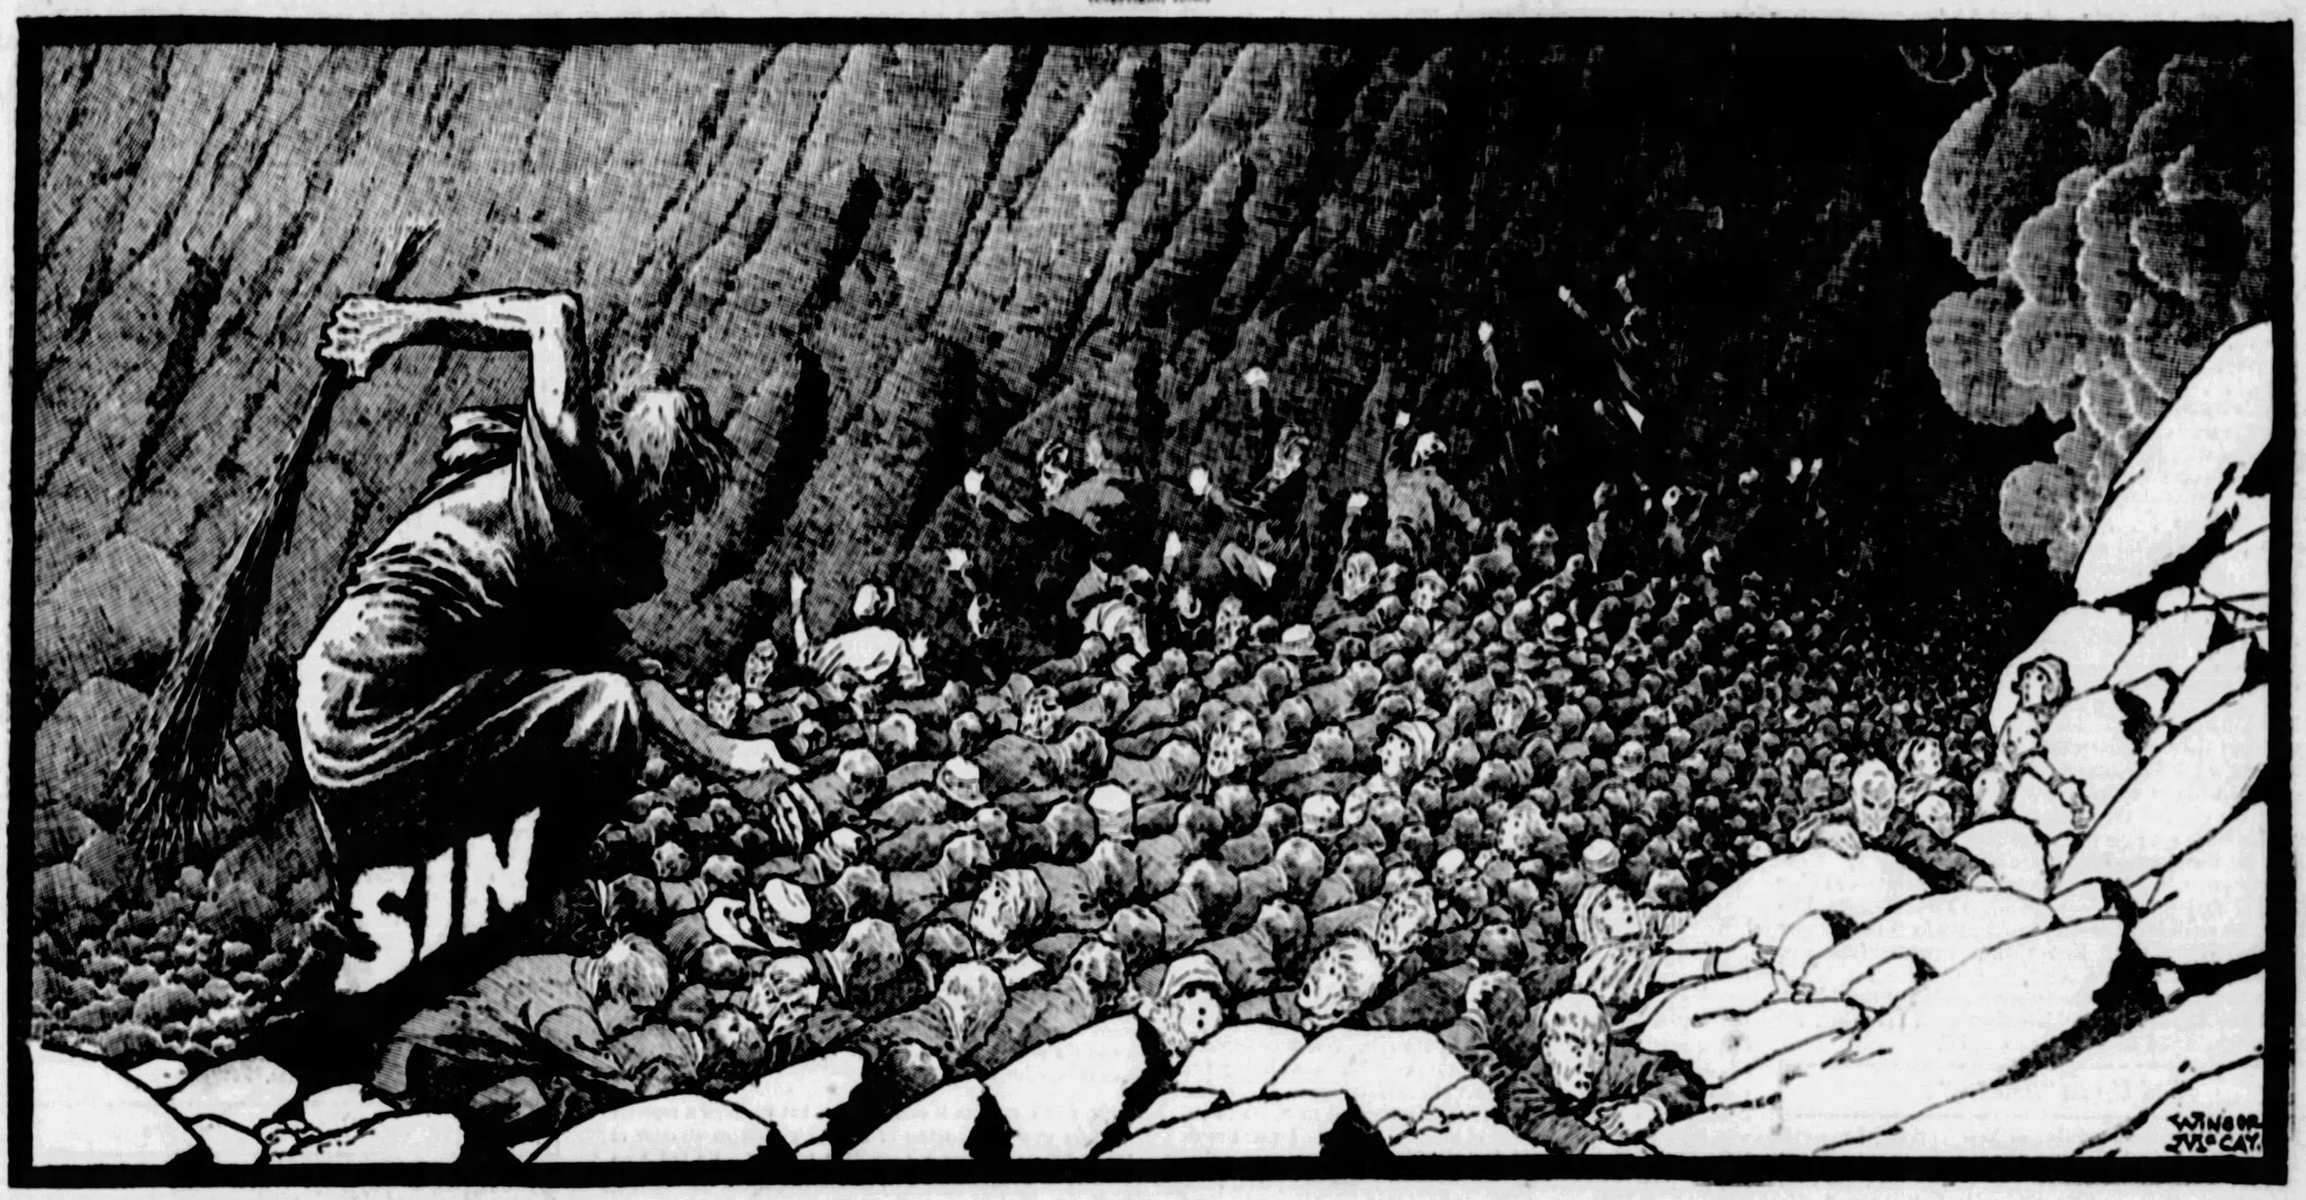
SIN PUNISHES ALWAYS

(Copyright, 1928.)



This picture is a warning to those that lead evil lives, and consolation, perhaps, for those that have wondered at good living's scant REWARDS.

Sin is a punishing demon; it first leads men on, then drives them into a corner and makes them suffer. None escapes.

Many a man, apparently respectable, and all unknown to his neighbors, feels the blows of the old hag, "SIN."

She knows MEN and she knows WOMEN, and punishes both remorselessly.

SIN is an old-fashioned word. "Telling a story" is a sin for little boys and girls. Misbehaving after the fashion of the higher apes, promiscuous immorality, is a sin, criticized in full grown men.

Drinking too much was and is a widespread sin emphasized by good ladies of various associations and clubs.

Lack of respect for Divinity expressed in blasphemy, failure to attend church, etc., was the favorite sin of our Puritan ancestors.

The history of sin is as old as the history of the human race, dating from the fatal plucking of the apple from which, in a moment, according to Milton, Nature felt that all was lost.

"Her rash hand in evil hour Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat; Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat sighing through all her works gave signs of woe that all was lost."

This picture is not intended to represent any special line of sin, any particular attack on truth, morals, religion or business.

Sin is doing that which the doer KNOWS he should NOT do.

"The heart knowest his own bitterness." Every man knows when he does wrong, and when he does wrong he knows that he SINS.

What is sin in one is ignorance or bad training in another.

A "head hunter" on a savage island cuts off the heads of his neighbors, preserves them and uses them to decorate his house, and can do it WITHOUT SIN. For he is doing that which HE thinks right, pleasing in the eyes of men and in the eyes of his gods.

Another man, white, in this rich country decorates his house with paintings and tapestries, bought with the profits of child labor. He has never cut off the head of a human being or killed a child with his own hands. But he has ruined and stunted the lives of children, and is a vile sinner, worthy of the deepest hole in the hottest part of hell if there be a burning hell.

"The wages of sin is death."—Romans, vi., 23.

This statement we take on faith. Except for teachings of faith we know nothing about what happens after death.

But we live governed by justice. And intelligence leads us to believe that justice will reach and govern us hereafter. Reward for well doing, punishment for sin.

That the "wages of sin is death" is taught generally.

The lesson that this picture teaches emphasizes the fact that the wages of sin is also suffering and punishment IN THIS LIFE, and before death.

No man knows, except the drunkard, how drunkenness punishes those guilty of that particular sin.

The bitter remorse, the physical pain, the will growing weaker, and conscience always unforgiving.

Those that lecture a drunken man for neglecting his children, his wife and all of his duties are talking to one who knows better than they know what he is doing, what it means and what the suffering is.

Martin Luther called sin "ESSENTIALLY A DEPARTURE FROM GOD."

It might be more accurately described as a departure from a man's particular idea of God.

To kill those of another faith was a virtue in the minds of the old Mohammedans. Their prophet commanded it; the killer, if he met death while killing, went straight to Paradise.

Well-known lines by Butler describe the soft deception with which sinners seek to justify themselves:

"Compound for sins they are inclin'd to
By damning those they have no mind to."

But this picture shows the truth that in the end sin punishes the sinners. They cannot deceive themselves, and THEY cannot escape.

Plato called sin "disease, deformity and weakness." And Milton said, "Death from sin no power can separate."

For sin, and her shadow, death, follow the sinner and punish him. Sin stamps disease, deformity and weakness on its victims.

It shows in a face that has lost character, in eyes that shift, in shaking hands, shaken nerves.

Old sin in this picture castigates sinners with a lash. She really punishes them in more subtle ways.

The most dreadful and hopeless diseases that afflict men come directly from immorality.

The hardening of the heart and of the conscience is part of sin's punishment, a preliminary part.

Robert Burns wrote it:

I waive the quantum o' the sin,
The hazard of concealing;
But, och! it hardens a' within,
And petrifies the feeling!

Sin hardens men's hearts and "all within." It petrifies the feelings, its victims and slaves try to forget, trying NOT TO FEEL.

Goethe said:

Das Uebel macht eine Geschichte und das Gute keine."

Which means,

"Sin writes histories, goodness is silent."

Napoleon with his killings on a colossal scale, the Borgias with their poison, the "Conquistadores" torturing, robbing and exterminating helpless races, are among those that write so-called history.

And it is true "goodness is silent" often, in history's pages.

But stories of crime, torture and injustice are not REAL history.

The real, important history of the world is written by goodness. It was written by Columbus when he crossed the ocean, by Galileo when he revealed the secrets of the heavens, by Pasteur when he found remedies for disease, by Wilberforce and Lincoln when they freed the slaves, by all the scientists, inventors and really "great men" of the world.

To say "sin writes history and goodness is silent," concerning history as a whole, would be like saying of our modern period, that history is in the Death House, the electric chair and the prisons, whereas, in reality it is on the farms, in the factories and scientific laboratories.

Sin does write history, not the real history of the world, its struggles and conquests, but the history of failure, of sorrow, despair and death.

Sin writes history in the faces of sinners, in certain wards of the great hospitals, in the insane asylums, in the Death House, and at the end of the swinging noose.

"How immense appear to us the sins that we have not committed. That was said by Madame Necker, intelligent mother of the famous Madame de Stael.

All kinds of sin begin and make headway with self deception. The "moderate drunkard" pities and despises the absolutely hopeless drunkard. The hopeless drunkard, in his turn, despises and pities those that take drugs. And the drug taker, in the early stages, a slave for life, but not knowing it, pities and despises those that have sunk into open, hopeless drug slavery.

All alike suffer in the end the punishment that NEVER FAILS IN THIS LIFE, whatever may be the limitless mercy of another existence.

Slow, gradual is the descent into the pit where sin lashes the sinners and they gnash their teeth. "He that avoideth not small faults, by little and little falleth into greater," said Thomas Aquinas.

And another has said, "Our sins, like to our shadows when our day is in its glory, scarce appear; toward our evening how great and monstrous they are."

Men pride themselves on good living that, by OMISSION, are among the world's great sinners.

He that has power to do good and does it NOT, sins and will suffer.

He that could help and save others, and does NOT save them, is responsible for the sins of which they become guilty through his NEGLECT.

Fortunate he who, like St. Augustine, humbly admits that "but for God's grace, he would have been capable of committing any crime," or that like John Huss, looking at the drunkard in the gutter, said:

"But for the grace of God, there lies John Huss."

Sin in general, drunkenness in particular, and immorality most especially, finds many excuses. And among men the general and most stupid excuse is the attempt to set up double standards of sin and morality, one for men, one for women.

An Italian proverb says, "In men every mortal sin is venial; in women every venial sin is mortal." Many men take that seriously.

They agree heartily with the foolish expression, "Boys will be boys." But if you say "Girls will be girls," the idea that boys and girls can be held equally responsible horrifies them.

Even women that should set the example are guilty of excusing in men that which they would mercilessly condemn in women.

But sin, punishing and avenging, makes no such distinction.

Sin carries its victims, men and women alike, to the most disagreeable wards in the hospitals and stamps sin on their faces.

Millions can testify that this is a true picture.

The fool may say: "I don't believe in future punishment. I can do what I please with myself and my own."

Old sin with the heavy lash says: "Possibly, but you are MY OWN. I can do what I please with you," and lays the lash on heavily.

"Be sure your sin will find you out" is the warning that Moses gave to his followers.

Sin finds men out, and women, too, punishes them here on earth and gives them a sufficiently good imitation of hell without waiting for judgment after death.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY by O. O. McIntyre

Fannie Hurst Shows Versatility in New Vein.

HARPER'S recently brought out "A President Is Born," a novel showing Fannie Hurst's versatility in a striking w vein. I am late reading it, but hereby warn dyspeptics to off. Finishing it during the early morning hours resulted my dressing and going to the lunch counter in the Grand ntral to stow away an order of fried oysters and a slab of nce pie. I know of no book so capable of exciting gustatory ures. It makes one positively ravenous.

Skimming through its pages, I quote: "Candied yams . . candied apples on a stick . . . sweetbreads in individual ramekins . . . turkey dressing of citron, chestnuts d walnut meats . . . cranberry sauce jellied in star-aped molds . . . cider that stung like the all of an autumn outdoors . . . a pitcher of egg nogg with a fine peppering cinnamon . . . hot biscuits the size of a silver dollar and aming . . . kale boiled with bacon rind . . . a gallon l of apple butter . . . a batch of zimmtkuchen the shape soldiers, camels and stars . . . winesap apples . . . gar cookies with jam hearts . . . hominy with sorghum . . sliced cucumbers boiled in vinegar, cloves and gar . . .

"Pickled beets . . . grape jelly . . . pear and quince serves . . . picalilli and chow chow in press glassed hes . . . hashed brown potatoes with a crust on . . . tail stew with circles of green pepper swimming in rich wn gravy . . . Milk with a half inch cream on top . . fruit pie with the fork prints on the cover . . . bacon cklings . . ."

New York had a curious press agent stunt fizzle recently. man defied the "electric chair. The chair was placed on stage at the Hippodrome and the victim took 2,500 volts of amperes without a shudder. It is his claim that anyone cheat the chair if they know how. (Line forms to the ht). He holds a frying pan containing eggs during the eximent and the egs are fried to a crisp.

The fellow challenged the electric chair operators at Sing g to kill him, but they refused to notice his challenge. It is claim that victims of the electric chair die from the autopsy not the electrocution. More than 75 newspapermen saw demonstration. Only a few lines got in print.

Everybody, of course, thinks it is a trick, but they do remember those eggs frying in his outstretched hand just the ne. Somehow you cannot laugh that off.

Fed Up on "Babbitts"

Speaking for quite a number of New Yorkers, I am safe saying they are a little fed up on Babbitt literature. It has come the custom these days to make every man from west Jersey City appear as perfect bores in Pullman and ship oking rooms and other places where men are thrown together.

The Babbitt is made to talk something like this: "I cerly do enjoy meeting a lot of he-Americans like you folks. u are like myself, you notice things and you think for yourself. Just the other day at the Rotarian club—that's one of greatest get-together and pep 'em up organizations in the rld—we had John J. Doakes, you know, the great chain ug store king, and he said men in my town like myself reminded him of perpetual motion machines—and so on ad useum.

Those of us who travel only slightly know this isn't true. fact the most of us know the pests of the smoking room are fresh type of drummers from New York.

TUNNEY HAS STOOD THE SARCASTIC GAFF.

Here is one Walter Winchell dug up on Broadway. An actor ran across a vaudeville player he had not seen since he attended the vaudevillian's wife's funeral in an undertaking parlor.

"You certainly did carry on at your wife's funeral," he observed. "I never saw a man weep and rave so. I thought you would have to be taken out."

"Did you see me?" he inquired. "Well, you should have caught me at the cemetery.'

Where Dignity Doesn't Count

O yes, in Fannie Hurst's book a character is made to compliment another with: "He has great dignity."

"So," was the reply, "has a cigar store Indian."

"My Life" is an autobiography by Isadore Duncan, published post humously by Boni and Liveright. Here was one of the most remarkable women of the age. She was literally aflame with grace, and the ideas that won her hoots before her eventual triumph are now a part of the interpretive dance. She danced her wild and reckless life. No one did so much to revise the classic spirits of the old Greek periods. I saw her as her sun was setting—flesh had shackled her glorious abandon and her appearance on the Metropolitan stage was just a little pathetic. Her life was a constant succession of tragedies—on the brink of great happiness she was always cast into the abyss. Her greatest tragedy was pathological. It is patent in reading of her innumerable amours that she was touched by a nymphomania, and what could be easily explained as lust was to her a divine and consuming urge toward the heights. She made hundreds of thousands of dollars and gave it to those in need. She was the most devoted of friends. When her two illegitimate children were killed in an auto accident near Paris the real and glorious Isadora died. After that she was a mere shell.

Gene Markey tells of Gene Tunney being asked by a friend if it were true he was about to write a book.

"Heavens no!" was the reply. "It is bad enough to have a champion who can read. To have one who can write would be terrible."

Tunney has stood the sarcastic gaff. Almost every writer has hurled a javelin or so, but he has not flinched. Dempsey, I believe, is still more popular, and he has been a grand and noble ring figure. Perhaps he may be again, but to me there is something a little admirable about the way Tunney has gone his own way without talking back. He, by replying to his detractors, might easily have made himself ridiculous. As it is, he has merely confounded them.

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH by Havey Boyle

Elevator Operators Good Story Tellers, Havey Believes.

SEVERAL books and not a few lecturers recently have set forth the fact that the art of conversation is almost a lost one. We made a survey of the Pittsburgh field to find the best artists in this line. Naturally, at the outset we had pre-supposed that newspapermen, finding it imperative to keep to the bare essentials, might be in the van. This was wrong. Our prize was awarded to elevator operators on the basis of stripping out of conversation all unnecessary words—keeping the subject matter to a minimum without losing any of the imperative details.

THE limits of time imposed by the quick flight of the modern elevator causes the operators to edit their conversation to a point that would warm the heart of the hardest-boiled newspaper copy-reader living. If one is to tell a yarn between the first and eighth floors there certainly must be present a great feeling for just essentials.

We would rather have an elevator operator tell us a story than anyone else. There are few pauses awaiting for the shading of adjectives, in fact often they are entirely dispensed with. And they stick to the text in hand, rather than allowing something in the story to cause them to hark back a few years to give a background not always necessary.

Operators in Front Rank

OUR survey also showed that as adepts in keeping loose strings of varied conversation filed away for instant use when necessary the operators are in the front rank.

If you consider that Mr. A. steps off at the eighth floor with these words: "So Mabel took the $50,000 and—!" that Mr. B. gets off at the eleventh floor saying: "And at that moment Adolph said to me—!" and that on the fourteenth floor another passenger steps away with a story half-told, you will realize what dexterity of memory is needed to allow the operator to pick up these conversations at the proper point three days later when these story-tellers get on for another short ride.

YOU may think this is exaggeration, but we know a reporter here who in the midst of a story got off an elevator at the first floor to leave a newspaper building. He had been talking about an altercation he had had with a waiter, but he got off in the middle of the story. As it happened he was leaving to take a position on a New York paper. He stayed in New York three years then came back to Pittsburgh. Stepping on the elevator that he had left three years ago the reporter was no sooner in the car than the same operator who had hauled him three years ago said: "What did the manager of the restaurant say after you complained about the waiter?"

Carrying that story in unfinished state in his head for three years was a feat in itself, but it is magnified into a great achievement if you realize that in those three years the same operator carried around with him probably 1,000 other unfinished narratives which he hoped to have finished as soon as the narrators took another ride.

Are Not the Aggressors

THE survey, to clear up this problem once and for all time, also proved (charts and graphs will be supplied to skeptical persons) that elevator operators are never the aggressors in conversation. If the passenger starts a conversation the operators will be polite, but rarely does anyone ever notice an operator opening up a conversational attack.

THERE is an old myth that barbers have a flair for conversation. This is dying out. As a matter of fact, some of the customers are complaining that the barbers talk so little now that getting a hair cut and a shave is not the thrill it once was before the barbers became self-conscious.

THE trouble with authors and lecturers is they don't come in contact often enough with masters of the subjects they discuss. Let those who are morose about conversation study the elevator operators and find a pleasant surprise.

ROPINC THE NEWS by Will Rogers

Coolidge Made Hit In Havana, Is Opinion of Will.

WELL, all I know is just what I read in the papers, and what I see as I prowl hither and thither, The wife and I had a fine visit in Havana, Cuba. It's the first time I had ever been there, although she had stopped there with our retinue of children one time when they come around through the canal. It sure is a pretty place, one of the cleanest Cities I ever saw. They have got some new Chief of police or somebody and they are a Nut on cleaning up and believe me they got the old town scrubbed and shining.

I will write you more about the Pan American Conference later, as they have only been there long enough now to get over their complimentary remarks, and will be calling each other by their right names as the thing gets hotter. Calvin made quite a hit down there. He dident say nothing much only the usual pleasantries. But they like it. Of course when they held a clinic over the speech and took it apart, he had simply delivered a high school oration.

Many Americans There

Havana is just packed with Americans. All seem to be having a good time. The balance wheel is not so much on this flying personally, so we had to come home by train, about four or five days and nights of it. It's a nice trip over on the boat from Havana to Key West, about six hours. Nice comfortable steamers. Then a drive around Key West, which is a pretty and unique little city. They have just opened up a highway up along the Keys to Miami.

Florida is picking up fine. All the towns are building, and they have got rid of all the ones who only come there to speculate. All the smart ones have just charged a certain amount off to loss, and started the whole thing in on a sensible basis. It's a great winter resort. All the Real Estate panics in the world can't take that away from it.

"The Coming Country"

We come along the whole Gulf coast country. Thats the coming country, the whole thing that lays along the gulf of Mexico, New Orleans is going great. If they will ever do anything on that flood relief, it will go stronger than ever. You know if we should happen to have another flood next spring and cause another catastrophe like last spring, just think what Congress would have to answer for. Here it's been nine months and not a single shovel full of dirt moved to prevent another one.

Went on over through Houston who put their hand in what they thought was a prize convention grab bag and come out with the Democratic one. Well, they seem to be all hoppedup over it. You know they never had one before, and they are just as innocent about it. They dont know what they are. I am glad they got it through. It will give some of these Northern Deligates a chance to get that old mossback idea out of their heads about the South being slow and behind the times.

Great Thing for South

It's a great thing for the South to have it down there, and it is especially a great thing for Texas. I have repeatedly said after being in each State of the Union for two consecutive years, that North Carolina has made the most progress in the last five years, and Texas is next. It seems a surprise to people who don't travel around much to hear this. Perhaps they hadent heard of anything that either one of these two had done. But I want to be impartial, and I want to be fair, and that is what I absolutely believe. Course we got a lot of them that are humming. But like Oklahoma, and California, and Florida and a dozen others, they have been improving over a longer stretch of time. They have been great for quite a while. But North Carolina just looked like it popped up over night. They got everything. But Texas, that's no state, it's a Dominion. Dan Moody's got the biggest range of any Governor in the World, I reckon.

This Houston wanted an Ocean and they dident have one, so they just dug one. One man, Jessie Jones, just pulled out his check book when the towns were bidding on the Convention, (nobody had given him any money, there had been no collection taken up before he left Houston) and wrote out his personal check for $200,000; and layed it on the barrel head, and I want to tell you those Democrats pounced on it like a Congressman on a Mellon hard-earned savings. It takes a game Guy in any man's town to do what Jones did. Most towns would have to have Chamber of Commerce speeches and luncheons and drives for a year to dig that up. But that's the way those Babies down there do things. So go to see the town, even if you are not interested in the Convention, and the State has dozens of ones like, it, not all as big, but they all believe they are, and they will all surprise you.

HOUSTON DUG ITS OWN OCEAN

"Roads Could Save Time"

They say the Railroads are going to cut off three hours, Going east from California to Chicago. I don't know why they dont cut off 12 coming this way. There is not a road west of Chicago coming out here that couldent take off a full night, or day. When they get these Aeroplane lines going fine they will make these Railroad Birds step out here like the trains do east of Chicago, You wont see 'em stopping at every little place. There is not a schedule out here that can't let a train be 3 hours behind and then make it up in one division. They do it all the time.

The Hickman trial run Tom Heflin off the front page out here. Hoover has just been declared the Candidate of California. That means that Arizona will be against him. That's the State I got my vote from last time. I hope that Deligate hasen't died. Hoover is talking about resigning. That shows right there he is not a politician. He seems to think you can't serve two masters.

Lowden is strong with the Farmers, but the East is sorter scared of him. The East thinks if he was elected he would give the Farmers relief, and if they ever got relief, they would charge 'em too much for their grub. Dawes is the Baby that's just sitting back, listening to the Senate, but paying no attention to 'em at all. His mind is on Kansas City on a hot day. Curtis will be on the home grounds, and should Hoover and Dawes go into a huddle, that "Injun" is liable to come out of the scrimmage with the ball. BUT I still claim that if it looks like a tough race with Smith going to be nominated on the minority side, that Calvin will be rushed from the side lines to save the game. At least Hearst hasent won my money yet.

ARTIE by George Ade

ROMANCE AGAIN FOR ARTIE

Saturday Shoppers Pinch Hit for Cupid

THE STORY SO FAR:

Artie Blanchard is a young office worker with a great side talent for wise cracking. Each week he relates to his fellow white collar slaves, Miller and Hall, the latest sensational developments in his own private life. So far, Artie has related with gusto his success at a church social and a very conservative poker party. Soon after he tells the boys of his meeting a new sweetheart, Mamie, and his subsequent Lothario-like conquests, Artie confesses that he and Mamie have quarreled owing to excessive jealousy on Artie's part.

CHAPTER VI.

ONE Saturday afternoon Artie Blanchard was enjoying his half-holiday in a manner peculiar to himself. He was battling with the crowd in State street.

He had his coat collar turned up and his hat was pulled rakishly forward so that it threatened to produce friction with his eyebrows every time he changed the expression of his face.

He was whistling a classical composition that had lately taken possession of his thoughtful moments. It was entitled "Oh—oh—oh"—and then some words that meant nothing.

Artie did not know the tune or the words, so he merely whistled it on speculation and when he came to the doubtful parts he hurdled.

When he grew tired of whistling he smoked a black cigar.

Artie was apparently at peace with the world and any one to have seen him shift his cigar from the right pocket of his mouth to the left merely by the play of facial muscles would have said, "Here's a young man content."

But Artie, like many other young persons, never whistled more cheerfully, smoked more hungrily and looked into show windows with more seeming interest than when he was keeping company with a great sorrow.

It could have been nothing less than the guiding hand of Fate that shoved him around a bevy of women who were carrying bundles and looking at show windows at the same time, thus contriving to mow down anything and anybody that happened in their way. For Artie immediately got a view of the cause of his sorrow. He would have known her by her tan sport coat alone, but the saucy tilt of a new spring hat left no doubt in his mind as to the wearer's identity.

Your ordinary lover would have retreated, palpitating. Considering that when Artie had last seen her she was all tears and that his parting words had been "There are others," it would have been proper for him to drop back into the moving crowd before she turned from the display of precious jewelry and saw him there looking at her.

But Artie did nothing of the kind.

He walked up to her, brushed some imaginary dust from her sleeve, and said, "Hello, Child! How's everything stackin'?"

Mamie turned around and there was a leap of color to her face.

She said: "Why, Mr. Blanchard!"

"What was you pipin' off—the bracelet?" asked Artie.

"Yes," with her face half-turned from him.

"Do you see the diamond one there? I was lookin' at it the other day. I'm thinkin' o' buyin' it for a girl friend of mine."

"Indeed!"

By this time she had recovered somewhat and she spoke with an evident attempt to be coldly sarcastic.

"You heard me, didn't you? I went in and asked the top side guy how much the bracelet meant to him, and he said I could have it for four hundred simoleons. 'Well,' I says, 'that's a mere bagatelle to me. Get ready to wrap it up. That wouldn't keep me in necktties for a month!'"

Artie paused for a moment or two, watching her all the time, and then he said: "But mebbe you'd rather have that other one up there. You know what you'd like."

Mamie did not look at him and she did not answer. Artie's attempted playfulness was too boorish for her, and Artie seemed suddenly to realize this. He changed his tactics.

"Mame," he said, putting his forefinger softly against her arm.

"Well?"

"Is it fixed up?"

"Is what fixed up?"

"You know."

"No, I don't."

They were standing side by side, both looking intently into the show-window and talking to it. Their conduct was sufficiently strange to have attracted the attention of the people who brushed against them. But in State street the pedestrians will not give their serious attention to a man unless he does something worthy—such as falling off an elevated platform or colliding with a yellow cab.

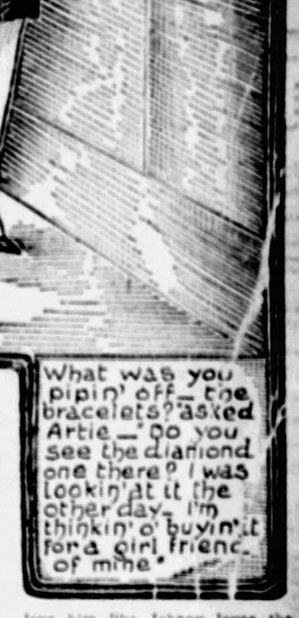
"How about my little old picture? Is it turned to the wall?"

"I—guess not."

"Oh, you're guessin', are you? Well, I s'pose the other boy's fillin' all my dates?"

"That silly thing!"

Artie chirruped as if skeptical. "He's a nice boy," said he, and then added, after a deep sigh, "I love him like Johnny loves the measles!"



Mamie turned to him and, in a quick flame of earnestness, said:

"Artie, you know I can't bear that old thing, and I'll never speak to him again as long as I live." She had tears in her eyes.

"You won't be loser at that."

"I'm going to write to him and let him know something."

"Why, no; not at all. Give me his address and I'll go round and fix it all up with him."

"If it hadn't been for him we wouldn't have—"

"Wouldn't have put on the gloves, eh? Well, come on. Let's be movin'!"

"I have to meet the Connelly girls in a few minutes," she said. "I promised them."

"Shake 'em. You've got somethin' better than the Connelly girls."

Mamie laughed and the war was then and there over, before the tears had dried.

"How about Tuesday night, Mame?"

"Yes, or Monday."

"Good enough! An' now you come right in here and get into line with a bunch o' violets. There's nothin' too rich for the sunshine o' the North Side."

It was not the same Mamie who came out of the florist's wearing violets, and it was not the same Artie who was grinning at her delight over the little present.

"Now, I must go for the Connelly girls," said she.

"All right. Say, Mame—"

"Yes."

"I'll just make that tomorrow night."

One Girl to Another by Lloyd Mayer

Mother's Health Gives Sandie Concern

"MY DEAR, I'm all-of-a-JOT-and-TITTLE at this point—I ACtually AM because I'm simply worried SICK about MOTHer, my dear, because she's HONestly on the VERGE of coLLAPSE, no less! I mean she has these odd SPELLS of asPHAsia or something and, my dear, I NEARly have hysTERICS when she has one of these SPELL effects, my dear, because her converSAtion SUDdenly sort of WANders VAGUEly off into SPACE and it's ACtually too SCREAMing for WORDS because it simply DOESn't make SENSE—can you BEAR it, my dear?

"Well, ANYways, somebody told her about this TERribly famous SPECialist who's a neuROLogist or something wild like that, my dear, and he's been coming to SEE her REGularly twice a WEEK and he's SIMply FAScinating-looking, my dear, with the most tiTANic brown EYES you've ever GAZED upon and simply GORgeous wavy HAIR and a perfectly aDORable MOUTH, and MOTHer says his BEDside MANner is deLIGHTful—Can you BEAR it, my dear?

"I MEAN she feels HEAPS BETTER alREADY because I SECretly think she's conceived a mad infatuAtion for him, my dear, because MOTHer is ALways making a FOOL of herself over SOME man, my dear—you know the TYPE—but I MUST say I can't BLAME her for FALLing for this ROmeo because he's got IT, my dear, and I'm TERribly intrigued with him mySELF at this point only of course I've only SEEN him proFESsionally, sort of, to talk about MOTHer's condition with him or something because I'm HONestly all-of-a-DOOdah about her—no less!

"But he says it's a matter of NERVES, my dear, and prob'ly after she's had a good REST she'll be all RIGHT again, but I REALly think these FASHionable doctors are Terribly optiMISTic, sort of.

"I mean they simply NEVer tell you the WORST, do you know what I mean? Of course I HOPE he's RIGHT about MOTHer, the poor dear, but the FACT is she's ALways been SLIGHTLY GA-ga and at RANdom in the SKYpiece and I REALly think these asPHAsia spells that have been coming ON her, sort of, are just the beGINning of the END, and it makes me TOO dePRESSED to THINK about it, my dear! I mean you don't KNOW how nonPLUSSED and TRIBulated I am at this point!

"WELL, ANYways, my dear, this DOCtor's NAME is FORtescue or something and he's REALly one of the most INTeresting people to TALK to you've ever KNOWN because he knows HEAPS about lots of inTRIguing SUBjects and after he's come to see MOTHer I always go into CONference with him sort of, to find OUT if she's any WORSE do you know what I mean? And, my dear, it's TERribly aMUsing because he tells the FUNniest STORies you've ever HEARD, my dear, only I was emBARrassed to SOBS the other day because ONE story he told me was AWfully risQUE, sort of—can you BEAR it, my dear?

"But this Dr. FORtescue is PERfectly DARling to me, my dear, because he's SO symPATico as the SPANish say or something, my dear! I mean, you see, he KNOWS I'm all-of-a-BIB-and-TUCKer and PRACticably ready to ROLL over and BUTter myself with disMAY over MOTHer at this point and he's TRYing to make things just as EASY for me as he CAN, do you know what I mean?

"FOR instance YESterday I told him I sort of THOUGHT I oughtn't to go to DANces and things on account of MOTHer because prob'ly I ought to be WITH her more or something, but he said that was riDICUlous and it was HEAPS better for her to be left aLONE, sort of, although he said he apPREciated how DUtiful I was in wanting to stay home from PARties to be WITH her more and all, which I REALly think was TERribly SWEET of him, my dear—I ACtually DO!

"And he said he REALly thought I wasn't going out half eNOUGH at this point—can you BEAR it, my dear? So he said he wondered if I'd like to go to a matiNEE or something with him some day, and I said I'd simply aDORE to, my dear, so we're going to see something together next WEEK, my dear, and I HONestly think it's going to be HEAVenly going to the THEater with somebody really inTELligent and all like this Dr. FORtescue instead of having to go with one of these foul PIPsqueaks of youths who USually asks you, do you know what I mean?

"But I'm all hot and BOTHered about something at this point, my dear, because this afterNOON when I was talking with Dr. FORtescue about MOTHer he said he thought I looked TERribly faTIGUED and sort of FRAYED down to my WARP and WOOF, as it were, and, my dear, I don't know WHY, except that I'm REALLY AWfully sort of upSET about MOTHer and all, but I BURST into TEARS, no less, and, my dear, this Dr. FORtescue emBRACED me—can you BEAR it? I mean I s'pose it was just a FATHerly caRESS effect only I give you my WORD it didn't FEEL like it—I mean I ACtually DO!

"GOSH, my dear, I've got to LEAP HOMEward at this point because I'm SO nervous about MOTHer, you know, and I'm having a FITting at FIVE o'CLOCK, ANYways my dear, but let's coLLABorate again NEXT Sunday and play BRIDGE or something because I'm DYing to tell you LOADS of DIRT, my dear—I mean I ACtually AM!"

Grin and Bear It

THE SEARCHER.

THE man at the bottom of the excavation glanced furtively round from time to time as though fearful that one among the curious watchers above might detect the reason for this careful digging. Slowly, yet steadily, he plied the pick.

As the minutes passed and no discovery rewarded his labor, an exclamation of impatience escaped him. He rested for a moment, and glanced up at the brink of the pit. A heavily built man waved his hand imperatively, and the digger bent to his task again muttering.

Now he seemed to be straining his ears for some sound. The chink of coin, perhaps, or the scrape of the pick on the iron band of some long-buried chest at last destined to deliver up its riches. Listening intently, he scraped gingerly among the loose earth, but still nothing came to light.

Suddenly his figure stiffened, and for a second he stood motionless. Then dropping his pick he raced madly up the ladder. The long quest was ended—the foreman had blown the dinner whistle.

THE GUILTY CONSCIENCE.

WEARILY the tramp plodded up the garden path and took off his hat to the lady of the house. She eyed him keenly.

"Look here; aren't you the man I gave a good big meal one bleak February morning?" she demanded sternly.

"I'm the man, mum," was the reply.

"Well, do you remember you promised to shovel all the snow out of my garden and then sneaked off without doing it?"

"Yes, mum, and me conscience smote me. That's the reason I tramped all the way back here through the blazing sun to finish the job."

COMEDY, MUSICAL AND PLAIN, AND OPERETTA COME

STAGE PERSONALITIES -:- REPRESENTING CURRENT BILLS -:- IN OUR THEATERS

MARTHA MORTON and Eddie Dowling in "Honeymoon Lane," musical comedy attraction in the Nixon. ILSE MARVENGA, DeWolf Hopper and Lillian Glaser of the cast of "The Student Prince," operetta opening in the Alvin Tuesday night for an engagement of five days. EDDIE PASCAL and Patricia Quinn are appearing in "Abie's Irish Rose," comedy remaining in the Pitt.

Comedian of Today Equal of Old Stars, Young Actor Says

Eddie Dowling Pays Tribute to De Wolf Hopper and Others.

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

WHAT with a young comedian of a current attraction throwing verbal tributes at elder comedians, one of whom is prominent in another local entertainment, we seem to be on the eve of a theatrical bouquet week. Eddie Dowling, of "Honeymoon Lane," is speaking, and he concedes there are just as good comics on the stage now as ever there were, only they don't stand out so prominently because there are more of them.

"There is no doubt that the musical comedy and light operatic stage has never seen better comedians than men of the caliber of DeWolf Hopper, Francis Wilson, Will Daboll, Digby Bell, Tom Seabrooke, Frank Daniels, Jerome Sykes and one or two others," observes Dowling.

"And what made them stand out particularly was the fact that they were so few in numbers. The general run of lyric comedians in those days was just ordinary in comparison with these really brilliant stars, a fact which emphasized their talents all the more.

"And it was these few great stars of the past who educated the public to appreciate and expect a superior brand of fun-making, which the present generation of comedians must supply or pack up their make-up boxes and turn to some other line of the profession.

"Comedians of today, in order to be successful, must stand comparison with the great ones the past, just as the many star base ball players of the present time are sized up with the few Buck Ewings, Charlie Bennetts, Larry Lajoies, Hans Wagners, John Clarksons, Amos Rusies and Christy Mathewsons of the past.

"And because there are more good comedians now than there were then, we of the present generation of fun-makers probably will have to be content with a little less glory than is accorded our predecessors."

Mr. Hopper, whom Eddie named in his comment on the excellencies of comedians happens to be in the company of "The Student Prince," so you have the opportunity of seeing an example of the generation he admires so much and comparing it with the work of the younger clan of which Eddie, himself, is a shining example. Mr. Hopper has been the star of many a musical production, the names of which are not known to the younger theater goers, but there is one thing for which he is famous that is never forgotten by an audience. No audience ever fails to insist that he recite "Casey at the Bat."

Now that we are about it we might just as well make it an old-timers' week and bring a couple of others to the front. One is in Eddie Dowling's company, none other than Jerry McAuliffe, who used to tour the one-night stands as a star in "Shamus O'Brien," in the days when it was a mighty poor Irish stage hero who wasn't called upon to outwit a dozen or so red-coated English soldiers.

Another is Thomas McGrath, who has played the role of the priest in "Abie's Irish Rose" more than 2,400 times and who began his professional career in Pittsburgh as a boy with Frank Mayo in Shakespearean repertoire. He was taught stage traditions and methods by his father, an actor who played with E. L. Davenport and other notables of his day, just as the younger McGrath has played the notables of his time, including James A. Herne, Ada Grey, David Warfield, Louis Mann and others.

As to comedians—the stage has not produced them all. Two who will cavort on the Harris stage dug themselves right out of the dust of a baseball diamond. They are Nick Altrock and Al Schacht, whose "cutting up" made them so popular with fans that they had to be made a fun-making sideshow of recent annual stagings of the more or less celebrated world's series.

Mr. Dowling and his company, in "Honeymoon Lane," will be in the Nixon. In the company are Gordon Dooley and Martha Morton.

"The Student Prince" comes to the Alvin for five nights, opening Tuesday. Besides Mr. Hopper the company includes Ilse Marvenga and Sudworth Fraser.

"Abie's Irish Rose" begins its second and last week in the Pitt Monday.

Nazimova will be the Keith-Albee vaudeville star in the Davis, appearing in a playlet, "India." The Davis screen feature will be H. B. Warner in "French Dressing."

The Gayety Stock Company will present "Hello, America." Viola Elliott, in "French Models," will be the Academy burlesque offering.

The East End Theater players have scheduled "Within the Law."

The Harris and Sheridan Square and Loew's Aldine offer popular priced vaudeville and motion pictures. Photoplays and stage attractions are the programs in the Grand and Penn. A photoplay bill is the Olympic offering.

DIRECTOR

AND ACTOR with the stock company in the East End, which will present "Within the Law" this week, is J. Arthur Gordon.

DANCER

Nixon Offers Eddie Dowling

EDDIE DOWLING comes to the Nixon Monday in the leading comedy role of his own musical comedy, "Honeymoon Lane," one of the successes in New York last season. Since running a year on Broadway "Honeymoon Lane" has been playing in Boston and Philadelphia. It is stopping off here on its way to Chicago. The story is about Mary Brown, a country lass, who is dissatisfied with her position in a local pickle factory but is equally dissatisfied with the prospect of marrying Tim Murphy, played by Eddie Dowling. Dowling wrote the book and lyrics and James Hanley penned the music. With the star are Gordon Dooley, Martha Morton, the comic Gordon's young wife; Bobby Perkins, ingenue; Florence O'Denishawn, dancer; Esther Muir, comedienne; Al Sexton, juvenile; Worthe Faulkner; Leo Beers, Bernard Randall, Adeline Seaman, Helen Ault, D. J. Sullivan, Jerry McAuliffe, Josie Intropidi and a chorus of 40 girls.

Alvin Offers Five-Day Bill

"THE STUDENT PRINCE" returns to the Alvin for an engagement of five days, beginning Tuesday, February 14, with matinees Wednesday and Saturday. Ilse Marvenga comes back in her original role, that of the barmaid at Heidelberg, with whom the prince falls in love while spending his year at the famous university. DeWolf Hopper, dean of American comedians, will be seen in the role of Lutz, valet and personal attendant to the prince, later the king. Sudworth Fraser plays Prince Karl Franz. Others in the company are Herbert Waterous, Lillian Glaser, Jayne Herbert, William H. White, Charles Mack, Emmie Niclas, Townsend Ahearn, Richard Lear, Eugene Ordway and Olive Reese, the male student chorus and a female chorus.

Melody, Romance And Mirth Fill Local Theaters

Nazimova Furnishes Only Escape From "Honeymoon Lane" or "Student Prince."

By GEORGE SEIBEL.

WHILE the lovers of musical plays will revel in two such attractions during this week, devotees of the theater who take their drama straight may go to see Nazimova at the Davis, where she is a piece of the vaudeville program. It has been observed that our managers do not believe strongly in diversity—when there is a good musical play in town, there are generally two of them; when there is a notable dramatic offering, there are generally two of those.

GEORGE SEIBEL

"The Student Prince," again coming to the Alvin, is one of two operettas based on plays originally "made in Germany," but of exceptionally good material. The first was "Blossomtime," in which the immortal melodies of Franz Schubert were used. Years before "Blossomtime" was produced, the perrenial favorite at the Irving Place Theater in New York was a comedy called "Das Dreimaederlhaus" — (The House of Three Girls.) In this comedy Franz Schubert was the hero, and a number of his songs were sung; but it was first of all a comedy of character, admirably played by actors that made every part live. The Irving Place players had a reputation dating back to Heinrich Conried's regime for marvelous ensemble acting—and in this comedy they surpassed themselves. After a while some one had the happy idea of basing a musical comedy on the German play and expanding the Schubert score. The result was "Blossomtime," one of the biggest hits in years. That started other minds to looking for similar material. And the result was "The Student Prince," another tremendous hit.

The Zest of Youth

Just as "Blossomtime" utilized the Schubert mine of melody, so this other musical play dug up the treasures in the old "Kommersbuch" of the German students, and embroidered them upon the plot of "Alt-Heidelberg," a play by Wilhelm Meyer-Foerster, made famous in this country by Richard Mansfield. Foerster's play was a sensation in Germany before it was brought to this side. Here it was first played by Aubrey Boucicault, son of Dion Boucicault, and was a failure. Critics said he could not produce the illusion of youth. Mansfield, a much older man, took up the play, and did create the illusion of youth and romance. And now that story is enshrined in the favor of the public by this musical version which has done more to advertise the university of Heidelberg than the gigantic wine-cask in the old ruined castle—more than any football team or varsity crew has done for any American institution of learning.

In those student songs, which are sung by a male chorus of 60, there is every nuance of pathos and mirth, and many of the airs were furnished by famous composers. It is a fact that one of the most ribald drinking songs was written by the head of the department of religious instruction in Prussia. It is also a fact that one of the most fervid love songs has found its way—the tune, of course—into the pages of American hymn-books. But all this is aside from the fact that "The Student Prince" is rich entertainment, and that the cast coming to the Alvin, headed by Ilse Marvenga as Kathie, DeWolf Hopper as Lutz, and Sudworth Fraser as Karl Franz, augurs a splendid performance of the melodious romance.

Bobs and Pickles

"Honeymoon Lane," coming to the Nixon, has no romantic old ruins for a background and no student songs for its core of melody. The hero, it appears, is employed in a pickle factory, and the heroine is consumed with an ambition to bob her hair. The story tells of the girl's ambition to leave her country home for the Great White Way, and of her lover's plan to encourage her by getting the village freak to provide a romantic interpretation of her dream. Upon this thread the action is strung, and as it provides for a large cast of singers, dancers, comedians and auxiliaries of all kinds, there is every prospect of rich entertainment here too. Eddie Dowling, who plays the principal role, is responsible for the book in conjunction with James Manley. "Honeymoon Lane" ran for a year in New York.

So theatergoes will take their drama spiced with songs and dances unless they look up Nazimova, coming to the Davis with a playlet called "India." It is said to be based on "Mother India," Katherine Mayo's book that has

NAZIMOVA, actress of the stage and screen, will come back to Pittsburgh in "India," a feature of the new Davis vaudeville bill.

SONGSTER

SAM HEARST will be featured in a song act on the vaudeville bill to open Monday in the Harris.

Bethlehem Festival Of Bach Music Is Worth the Journey

Moravian Fete in May Is of Interest to Pennsylvanians.

By J. FRED LISSFELT

WHILE our tourists are planning week-end auto trips to Cook Forest, to Cumberland, or to Bedford, I should like to interest them in a pilgrimage within the boundaries of Pennsylvania that will bring both physical recreation and spiritual joy. This pilgrimage will take them to Bethlehem, to the Bach Festival.

As good Americans and as good Pennsylvanians it behooves us to attend this festival before we plan for the music in the Berkshire or in Cincinnati, or Bayreuth or Salzgurg. Bach devotees come from Texas, California, Mexico, even from Europe to find the true spirit of this great composer amid the Colonial atmosphere of Bethlehem and its Moravian descendants.

And all those devotees are not musicians, for on the campus of Lehigh University during these concerts one rubs elbows with the Roosevelts and other folk of like culture.

Bethlehem lies in the fertile Pennsylvania Dutch country. There are numerous beautiful and historically interesting drives in the neighborhood; Philadelphia and New York are within a few hours' run. In spite of the steel mills, the old town is quite untouched by modern repair and rebuilding. The ancient graveyard, the original church, school and many dwellings of earliest settlers are preserved and occupied. Old Moravian customs still are observed, and the calm devotional spirit of that sect hovers all about the place.

The Moravians came to America as religious refugees. The rigorous program of their daily life was relieved by music, an art they not only enjoyed, but understood. These settlers founded our first choral and orchestral societies; they always included Haydn and Handel oratorios and cantatas in their church festivals. The orchestra founded in Bethlehem was the first American orchestra to play Mozart symphonies. It played these works as soon as they were released from the press, and waited eagerly for Beethoven's first orchestral compositions. The Moravians also imported the earliest brass instruments into America, for the trombone choir was an imposing part of their church program.

Therefore, we may be certain that music is a heritage of the Bethlehem choir for many of the members are descendants of the first Moravians. While important singers are engaged to sing the main parts of the cantatas, they are never exploited, and commercialism in no way touches the festival. Bach's music is the only reason for this annual pilgrimage.

On festival days, visitors trace their way to Lehigh campus much as they do toward the basilica at Lourdes. From every district the hushed crowd gathers to hear the trombone choir sound the call to service from the tower of Packer Memorial Chapel by intoning those dignified Lutheran chorales. After the concerts visitors find their way into homes where the committee has assigned them, simple, cozy homes, as comfortable as their owners. Leaving Bethlehem, I have always felt that for a few hours I had lived outside America and its hasty pursuit of success, that my musical faith had been restored.

The concert scheduled for Friday, May 11, will include:

Cantata—"Shout for Joy, Ye Ransomed Band."
Concerto for two pianos.
Chorales.
Cantata—"A Stronghold Sure Our God Remains."
Magnificat—"Magnificat Anima Mea Dominum."
The B minor mass, as always will occupy the entire Saturday program.

All inquiries should be addressed to H. J. Schneller, 67 West Broad street, Bethlehem, Pa., and I dvise to inquire early.

Davis Show Has Nazimova

IN THE Davis, beginning Monday, Nazimova will appear as headliner in the Keith-Albee vaudeville program. The photoplay feature for the week will be "French Dressing," starring H. B. Warner. Nazimova is coming in a new playlet, "India," from the pens of Edgar Allan Woolf and Fanny Hartz Friend. In the star's support will be Robert Connes and Isabel Hill. Sidney Marion will be assisted by Ottalie Corday, in a singing and dancing act in a special setting. The Agemos, a team of equilibrists, will perform on perch pole on a ladder. Jack Russell and his Dancing Pickaninnies will be seen in a fantasy entitled "Southland," in which will be introduced melodies taken from the Negro spirituals blending into present day airs. Two other stage acts and other screen entertainment are included in the bill.

VAUDEVILLE

BOB HALL will be seen on the vaudeville stage of the Sheridan Square this week.

LEGITIMATE, VAUDEVILLE, BURLESQUE, FILM PLAYS

CURTAIN CALLS by GEORGE SEIBEL

A Comic "Macbeth"

London is laughing at the latest production of Shakespeare in modern dress. It is "Macbeth" in khaki. A syphon for whisky and soda was among the props. Macbeth's castle is stormed by soldiers with steel helmets and modern rifles. The only disappointment in the way of an anachronism was Lady Macbeth's failure to wear silk pajamas in the sleep-walking scene.

O'Neill's "Dynamo"

While Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" is being played in New York, beginning at 5:30 p. m. and closing at 11, with an interval for dinner like "Parsifal," the dramatist has gone to California to assist in putting on his other recent play, "Lazarus Laughed," and to write his next one, to be called "Dynamo." Another late play of his, "Marco Millions," is also being played in New York City, so that it looks as if O'Neill might act the dynamo himself.

Another "Aimee"

The failure of "Bless You, Sister," played here by Alice Brady under the title of "The Ark," has not deterred Sidney Howard, author of "The Silver Cord," from putting on another drama in collaboration with Charles MacArthur, on the same theme. Its title is "Salvation," its heroine is modeled after Aimee Semple McPherson, and the star is Pauline Lord, whose work is praised, though the play is being faintly damned.

Sextet Heads Sheridan Bill

IN THE Sheridan Square for three days beginning Monday afternoon the Colonial Sextet will present songs and instrumental music. The photoplay feature will be Virginia Valli in "Ladies Must Dress." Ed Sawyer, who weighs 250 pounds, and Ruth Eddy, who weighs 98, will present a comedy aerial novelty. Other attractions and John Edward Mitchell in a new organlogue, will complete the bill. For the last three days of the week an attraction extraordinary will be found in Jeanie, in a special act, "Just a Sweet Child," will appear. Kemper and Bayard offer "Hokum and How." Louis London will sing character songs. The Seabacks, including Harry, the world's champion bag puncher, and other vaudeville acts will be seen. The screen presentation is Rin Tin Tin in "A Race For Life."

"Within Law" In East End

"WITHIN THE LAW," Bayard Veiller's melodramatic success, will be presented by the Harry Schwartz stock players in the East End Theater for a week, beginning Monday. The production, it is pointed out, is not only a powerful crook drama, but offers comedy and romance. Ray Rawlings and Blanche Wilcox will have the leading roles. J. Arthur Gordon, stage director of the company, will have a character role. Yonda Reid also will have a prominent part. Others in the cast will be Everett Johnstone, Beth Burke, Grace Whitcher, Phil Van Zandt and Ed Downes. There will be matinees Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

FEATURED

LIBBY HOLMAN is featured in "Merry Go Round," a revue coming to the Aldine stage Monday.

Venice Opens Gondola Room

THE new gondola room of the Venice Restaurant, Diamond street, has added a seating capacity of 150 persons to the regular dining room. The dining room proper at the Venice Restaurant has also been enlarged and completely redecorated. Etzi Covato and his orchestra are to play nightly at both the Venice and Flotilla Club, appearing in the early evening at the Venice, later at the Flotilla. The Flotilla Club revue, featuring Bebe Falvo, Pittsburgh entertainer, appears in the Venice at 7:30 p. m. and at the Flotilla at 11:30 p. m.

E. M. Newman Comes Feb. 21

E. M. NEWMAN comes February 21 to Carnegie Music Hall. "Soviet Russia and Republican France" is the title of the series of five traveltalks to be given in Carnegie Music Hall on the five consecutive Tuesday evenings, beginning February 21. The "journey" is divided as follows: "Moscow," "River Volga, the Caucasus, the Crimea," "Leningrad," "Normandy, Brittany, the Chateaux," "Paris by Night, the Pyrenees, the French Alps."

Gayety Adds New Players

THE Gayety burlesque revue, "Hello America," opens with a Sunday midnight show. The entire strength of the company is employed and in the cast are several new faces, including Harry Feldman, comedian, and Jessie Reese, a prima donna. Jack Lamont, Tom Whalen, Mabel Lea and Jim McCauley will be prominent. Earl Root and Billie La Monte will appear in their artistic dances. The musical program will include patriotic numbers and there is to be an international march, introducing costumes of various nations and the South Sea Islands will be represented in a picturesque Hawaiian scene. There are several comedy sketches, one of which is "Mrs. Henpeck." The chorus of 24 dancing girls will appear in novel numbers. Presents will be given away at every performance.

Harris Books Nick and Al

NICK ALTROCK and Al Schacht, famous as baseball clowns, are coming to the Harris, the week beginning Monday afternoon. Assisted by Joe Engel, they will be seen in "Travesties on Popular Sports." All are members of the Washington American League Baseball club and the fans will recall their comedy antics at the world series each year. For stage purposes they have elaborated their act and have included a travesty on the seventh round of the Dempsey-Tunney fight. Gus Edwards' newest proteges, Myron and Sam Hearst, will sing. The photoplay feature will be Buck Jones in "Blood Will Tell." Hope Vernon is to offer songs. The Gaines Brothers offer ground tumbling and trapeze work. Other attractions and F. E. Dilks in a new organlogue, will complete the bill.

Grand Stage Has Dancers

THE stage bill in the Grand beginning Monday will present the original Horlick Family. This group is comprised of eight dancers. "The Patent Leather Kid," based on a Rupert Hughes story and starring Richard Barthelmess, has been held over as the photoplay feature. It is a thrilling and romantic drama of the prize fight ring and the battle front. Molly O'Day is the heroine. News pictures, a comedy and an overture by the theater orchestra also will be offered.

COMEDIAN

WILLIE SOLAR will come to the Penn stage Monday as the feature comedian in "Tokio Blues."

"Tokio Blues" Penn Show

JOHN MURRAY ANDERSON'S "Tokio Blues" will be presented on the stage in the Penn the week beginning Monday. With the exception of Willie Solar, comedian, the entire company of "Tokio Blues" is composed of Japanese. Foremost among them are the Three Moyskos, who were featured by Ed Wynn in his "Perfect Fool," "Grab Bag" and "Ed Wynn's Carnival." Naoe Kondo, another performer, appeared in such productions as "A Night in Paris," "Artists and Models" and "Big Boy." Helen Kim, who scored her first big success in the "Shanghai Gesture," starring Florence Reed, also is a feature. Hatsu Kuma is prima donna of the production. The photoplay will be John Gilbert's "Man, Woman and Sin."

Viola Elliott In Academy

THE Academy features the coming of Joe Perry and Viola Elliott. Miss Elliott will be seen in her all new "French Models" and Producer Perry promises an ornate scenic production. Miss Elliott will present her dancing specialties in striking costumes. George Hart and Hap Moore have been entrusted with the leading comedy roles. George Grafe, who is considered one of the best baritone vocalists in burlesque, has new songs. Newcomers to the cast are Edna Bates and her sister, Edythe, who introduce specialties. George Manning has a singing and dancing specialty. There are three extra features. There will be a midnight show Tuesday.

Aldine Books Music Revue

"MERRY-GO-ROUND REVUE," a musical production which enjoyed a long run at the Klaw & Harris theaters in New York, will be presented on the Aldine stage, beginning Monday, just as it was presented on Broadway—with the original cast, music, scenery and costumes. Included in the company are Libby Holman, the girl who wanted to be a good girl, but was always given wicked roles to portray; Leonard Stillman, Howell and Harger, Lucille Peterson, John Griffin, the "Pan-American Quartet," Tom Burton, George Fitzgerald and others. The production is in 15 scenes. Screen entertainment will complete the bill.

FRENCH?

MAYBE. Anyway Edna Bates is featured in "French Models," the new burlesque show coming to the Academy.

Miss Adoree Back on Set

RENEE ADOREE has fully recovered from illness and joined the company consisting of Conrad Nagel, Lloyd Whitlock, Frederick Esmelton, Adolph Milar, Maurice Murphy and Virginia Grey at Ft. Lowe, where Irvin Willat is directing Rex Beach's Alaskan story, "The Michigan Kid" for Universal.

Olympic Film Has Vitaphone

TWO Vitaphone presentations and Al Jolson's starring photoplay, "The Jazz Singer," comprise the new bill to open in the Olympic Monday. The photoplay will be offered with a Vitaphone accompaniment. Supporting Jolson in the film are May McAvoy, Eugenie Besserer, Warner Oland, Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, Otto Lederer, Richard Tucker, Anders Randolph and Bobby Gordon. The Vitaphone presentations will be "The Serpentine," a ballet of 25 girls, and "When Wife's Away," a comedy playlet.

Pitt Comedy In Last Week

BEGINNING Monday night, "Abie's Irish Rose" will enter its second and final week in the Pitt. This comedy had its beginning in Los Angeles in 1920, then it went to San Francisco, and from there it quietly entered New York, where it has played for more than five years in the Republic Theater, breaking all known records. The cast includes Phil White, Patricia Quinn, Ted W. Gibson, Eddie Pascal, Thomas McGrath, Jack McCabe, Alfred Clarke and Bertha Waldron.

HELLO GIRL

NO TELEPHONE girl, but a principal in the cast of "Hello, America," Gayety show, is Estella Nack.

VARIETY IN SCENES AND THEMES OF PICTURES

CELEBRITIES OF :-: SHADOW AND SPOKEN STAGE :-: IN NEW PHOTOPLAYS

PATSY RUTH MILLER is Glenn Tyron's heroine in his new comedy, "A Hero for a Night," coming to the Aldine Monday.

JEANNE EAGELS, the Sadie Thompson of the spoken drama, makes her movie debut in John Gilbert's picture, "Man, Woman and Sin," new Penn picture.

AL JOLSON is bringing George Jessel's "The Jazz Singer" to the Olympic and Regent screens.

PRIZE FIGHTER and soldier—that's Richard Barthelmess in "The Patent Leather Kid," which is being held over in the Grand. Molly O'Day is the heroine.

VIRGINIA VALLI portrays a department store stenographer in "Ladies Must Dress," Sheridan Square film.

"Rain" Star Makes Debut on Screen In Gilbert Picture

Jolson Puts "The Jazz Singer" in Movies. Barthelmess Here Second Week.

By MILDRED FILLMORE

HELLO, everybody. I certainly covered a lot of territory last week. And I suppose many of you did the same. What—with Richard Barthelmess fighting on the East Side and on the western front, the Cohen and Kelly families battling in Paris, Lois Wilson romancing in Coney Island, dapper Adolphe Menjou composing in Vienna, and so on and so on, not forgetting the sister act that Sally O'Neil and Molly O'Day put on in the big city. All in all, it was a happy week, with most of the fadeouts finding the heroes and heroines in each other's arms.

And the new week? Well, from where I'm sitting, the coming movie parade looks mighty good. It isn't an altogether new parade, however, for two photoplays will be hold-overs. One of these is Richard Barthelmess' "The Patent Leather Kid," which will be seen for another week in the Grand. The other is "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris," which will remain in the Cameo. Barthelmess certainly gives a peach of a characterization in his picture. Some boy, Richard. He makes a grand prize fighter and a great soldier.

Speaking of soldiers, one of the screen's most popular soldiers, Jim of "The Big Parade," is to be with us. Of course, you know I mean the dashing John Gilbert. This time John will be seen as a reporter on a big newspaper. And hark to this: Jeanne Eagels, the Sadie Thompson of the stage play "Rain," plays the feminine lead. In the film, which marks her screen debut, Jeanne has replaced her famous Victrola with a typewriter and does a society editor, who figures big in the intrigue and politics of the national capital. Your right, it mightn't be a bad idea to tell you the name of John and Jeanne's picture—its "Man, Woman and Sin" and it is a Penn booking.

George Jessel's "The Jazz Singer" was with us on the spoken stage last week. This week we are to get the movie version, coming to the Olympic and Regent under the same title. Al Jolson has the Jessel role in the photoplay—that of a cantor's son, who is forced to decide between family traditions and the lure of Broadway brightlights. The picture will be offered with the Vitaphone accompaniment.

"French Dressing" will be the photoplay in the Davis and Liberty. It co-features H. B. Warner and Lois Wilson. H. B. has the role of a husband of a cold, prim little wife. Due to a misunderstanding, she goes to Paris for a divorce—and there, so I'm informed, she really begins to live, much to H. B.'s amazement and delight. The only trouble is she steps a little too fast for him.

Glenn Tyron, the boy who did such a good job at "Painting the Town," is to be back with us again in a new comedy, "A Hero for a Night," an Aldine booking. In this picture Glenn does a Lindbergh—that is, he makes a trans-Atlantic flight. Patsy Ruth Miller is the heroine—a daughter of a soap manufacturer, I think.

Buck Jones is to be seen on the Harris screen in a Western thriller, "Blood Will Tell." To the State will come that intelligent canine, Rin Tin Tin, in a picture titled "A Race for Life." The Sheridan Square will offer "Ladies Must Dress," with Virginia Valli. William Haines' "West Point" is a Kenyon booking. Monday and Tuesday the Schenley will present "The Love Mart," featuring Millie Dove and Gilbert Roland. The Cameraphone booking is Gloria Swanson's "Sadie Thompson."

In addition, to all this, stage acts will be seen in many of the theaters. Novelty reels, comedy films, organlogues and news pictures also will be on the bills. And, as an extra attraction, in some of the playhouses you will be escorted to your seats by saluting ushers. And talking of ushers, some of these snappy uniformed youths may do their saluting before the camera some day. Ricardo Cortez, Neil Hamilton, James Murray and some of the other movie lights started their careers by hiking up and down theatrical aisles.

Well, being original, I would say: "Such is Life." And so long, until next Sunday.

Grand Retains Barthelmess

THE Richard Barthelmess photoplay, "The Patent Leather Kid," will open a second week's engagement in the Grand, beginning Monday. The story of the film was written by Rupert Hughes and it concerns a young, tough, chewing-gum boxer of New York's East Side, who goes "yellow" in the World War, but stages a courageous comeback when his best pal is killed. Love, thrills and comedy, as well as tragic war scenes, are in the drama. The cast includes Molly O'Day, Arthur Stone, Matthew Betz and Hank Mann. A stage attraction, a short comedy and news pictures also will be on the bill.

Cohens, Kellys Stay in Cameo

"THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN PARIS," co-featuring George Sidney and J. Farrell MacDonald, is being seen for a second week in the Cameo, where the usual Sunday midnight show will be held. Sidney played the role of Cohen in the first "Cohens and Kellys," which proved to be one of the most popular comedy hits ever filmed. Vera Gordon and Kate Price, who created the roles of Mrs. Cohen and Mrs. Kelly, appear in the new picture. Other players are Gertrude Astor, Sue Carol and Charles Delaney. A new "Collegians" film and International News pictures are on the program.

Two Theaters Offer Jolson

THE screen version of "The Jazz Singer" will be presented, with a Vitaphone accompaniment, in the Olympic and Regent for the week beginning Monday. Al Jolson is the star. The picture story is that of a cantor's son who finds traditions and family ties are stronger than the lure of glory and the bright lights of Broadway. May McAvoy plays the leading feminine role. The supporting cast includes Otto Lederer, Richard Tucker, Warner Oland, Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, Eugenie Besserer, Anders Randolph and little Bobbie Gordon, former Pittsburgh boy. There will be two vitaphone acts—"When Wife's Away," a comedy playlet, and "Serpentine," a ballet offered by 25 girls.

PLAYS LEAD

CLIVE BROOK plays a romantic lead in "French Dressing," new Davis and Liberty photoplay.

Penn Picture Stars Gilbert

"MAN, WOMAN AND SIN," starring John Gilbert, will open on the Penn screen Monday. The scenes are laid in the nation's capital, against a background of intrigue and politics. Jeanne Eagles, star of the stage success "Rain," appears as a fascinating lady of mystery and charm, society editor of a great newspaper, mistress of its powerful owner and the beloved of a young reporter, played by Gilbert. Monta Bell, himself a newspaper man, wrote and directed the film. Included in the cast are Gladys Brockwell, Marc McDermott, Cosmo Kyrle Bellew, Hayden Stevenson and Charles K. French. "Tokio Blues," produced by John Murray Anderson, will be the stage attraction.

Aldine Gets Air Comedy

"A HERO FOR A NIGHT," a Universal production starring Glenn Tryon and with Patsy Ruth Miller in the main supporting role, will open Monday on the Aldine screen. The picture, a farce comedy, deals with the efforts of a correspondence school aviator to fly across the Atlantic Ocean. He does, eventually, but not when he intends to and not before he has enough thrilling experiences to keep him awake for months. Harry O. Hoyt, author of "Painting the Town," wrote the story. The cast includes Lloyd Whitlock, Burr McIntosh, Bob Milash and Ruth Dwyer. Vaudeville will be on the Aldine bill also.

Davis, Liberty Have Warner

"FRENCH DRESSING" will open Monday as the film feature in the Davis and Liberty. The story concerns a sedate married couple living in Boston. The wife is a solemn, serious, almost dowdy young matron. But she goes to Paris for a divorce when the husband inadvertently gets mixed up in a flirtation. H. B. Warner plays the star role. Lois Wilson, Lilyan Tashyman and Clive Brooks are in the cast. Nazimova will present a new playlet, "India," as a feature of the Davis vaudeville show. Janet Adler's Band will appear on the Liberty stage.

Star in Harris Is Buck Jones

BUCK JONES is said to have a colorful role in "Blood Will Tell," his latest feature for Fox Films, which comes to the Harris screen Monday. As the owner of an immense cattle ranch, Buck falls in love with Sally Morgan, who believes herself the rightful owner of the ranch. Buck finds himself under suspicion of being the instigator of numerous holdups in the vicinity. After a series of adventures, he is able to capture the real culprits and restore peace to a much-harassed community. The cast includes Kathryn Perry, Lawford Davidson, Harry Gripp, Harry Cording, Bob Kortman, William Caress, Buck Moulton and Austin Jewell. Vaudeville acts will be on the bill.

"Sadie" Film in Cameraphone

"SADIE THOMPSON," starring Gloria Swanson, is to be seen in the Cameraphone this week. It will open with a midnight show Sunday night. The picture is based on W. Somerset Maugham's story, "Miss Thompson." Lionel Barrymore appears in the film as Alfred Atkinson, a self-appointed reformer, who attempts to influence the life of an outcast girl, who is trying to live and let live. Raoul Walsh, the man who directed "What Price Glory," acted in the same capacity for Miss Swanson's picture. News pictures, organ music and a comedy film will be on the bill.

Sunday Organ Recitals Free

SIX pieces from the "Water Music" by Handel are included on the program for the free Sunday afternoon organ recital to be given at 4 o'clock in Carnegie Music Hall. The music was composed by Handel in an effort to conciliate King George I of England, with whom he had quarreled. Tchaikovsky, the Russian composer, also is represented on the program.

Dr. Caspar Koch, city organist, will be heard in the Sunday afternoon free organ recital in Carnegie Hall, North Side, at 3 o'clock. Oswald Johns, Welsh dramatic baritone, will be the guest soloist, and Robert M. Young will play the accompaniments. Nevin's "A Day in Venice," in which the Pittsburgh composer recorded his Venetian impressions, will be heard in its entirety.

Paderewski Here Tuesday

PADEREWSKI is to give a concert in Syria Mosque next Tuesday evening, February 14. His program includes: Symphonic Etudes, Schumann; Sonata, C sharp minor, Opus 27, No. 2, Beethoven; Bacarolle, Auf dem Wasser zu Singen, Soiree de Vienna, Serenade, "Hark, Hark," Erlking, Schubert-Liszt; Ballade, G minor, Nocture, F sharp major, Three Etudes, Nos. 4, 5, 6, Op. 10, Mazurka, A minor, Opus 17, Grand Valse Brilliante, E flat, Chopin; Melodie, B major, No. 2, Opus 8, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 6, Liszt.

OLD SHOCK OF NAUGHTY DRAMA GONE

By ALAN DALE,

Famous Dramatic Critic of Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.

IN reviving old plays, the stage manager always thinks he is going to be awfully up-to-date if he substitutes the word "motor" for "carriage" and sees to it that Dowager Dumpkins wears a skirt up to her knees, instead of one trailing the germ-ladden ground. Other equally straw-catching differences are scrupulously attended to by this more or less astute student, but he forgets the radical feature of these revivals—the positively irremediable circumstance that we—the audience—have changed so completely in our attitude towards life that the ephemeral dramas of 50 years ago really need an explanation on the program.

Formerly plays were largely influenced by that feminine bogey known as the "young person." You remember the young person. We were always worrking about what she would think—how certain discussions would be regarded by her unsophistication—and how dreadfully she would be shocked at expositions of life. The young person stood up mentally, and dired us! We had to mind our P's and Q's, or the young person would up and at us, and woe to us! Even to think of it today makes me laugh.

Today what was once the young person goes to see all the plays, and during the intermission sallies forth into the crowded, jumbled lobbies and smokes fiercely, often standing out on the sidewalks "elegantly gowned," and none the worse for it. After she has sampled the plays, she goes home and considers whether they are fit for popper and mommer to see, frequently deciding that they are not.

Today the young person knows her onions and can safely be trusted anywhere—which is perfectly sane, rather reassuring, but distinctly opposed to the revivals which treat of different times.

In the revival of "Mrs. Dane's Defense" in the Cosmopolitan Theater, we had a sex-play of 30 years ago, when sex hid itself under an entrenchment of Grundyisms, and the truth, unvarnished and distinctly objectionable, and even repulsive. Today the young person would laugh raucously at the plight of Mrs. Dane, who permitted a lot of Nozenbaums to pry into her past, cross-examine her sedulously and revel in her early indiscretion. The young person couldn't and wouldn't accept such a condition, and I'm bound to say that this complete volte-face is distinctly for the better.

Another old sex play that is almost funny today and is spasmodically revived is "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," which, when first produced, was regarded as almost indecent. The pious Mrs. Kendal produced it here and was rather severely handled, for she was mommer of British proprieties, and Pinero, in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," had raised merry Cain with 'em. But today I think that Aunt Tabitha could see the piece and not blush unduly. Our attitude towards sex questions has happily altered completely, and it is difficult to believe that we could ever have been as petty as we were 30 years ago in that matter at least. In "Mrs. Dane's Defense" they sit around drawing rooms and prattle about a certain scandal in which Mrs. Dane was involved in Vienna. She had been too friendly with the husband of the family in which she was living as governess, and the wife, learning this, committed suicide.

We have now discarded the four-act plays, thank goodness. Three are enough and—often—to spare. There are really an excuse for four acts of "Mrs. Dane." We tend towards brevity and terseness, both of which qualities are extremely desirable. The Theater Guild has offered us its nine-act dose with defiance and a certain challenge. It will not turn the tide at all. The three-act play will remain until we discover some brave and iconoclastic individual who will say all he has to say in two acts, with just one chance for the lobby-mongers to do their darndest.

The fact that "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was exceedingly well acted served to show even more forcibly the change in our attitude towards everything the play enclosed.

LOCAL BOY

BOBBIE GORDON, former Pittsburgh boy, is featured in Rin Tin Tin's picture, "A Race for Life," coming to the State.

CONDUCTOR

RICHARD HAGEMAN will be one of the guest conductors to appear with the Pittsburgh Symphony Society this season.

Star Visiting In Honolulu

HAVING finished "Home James," Laura La Plante immediately countermanded the direction and left for Honolulu on the S. S. Malolo. She will spend her vacation at the New Royal Hawaiian Hotel, returning to Universal City in time to start "One Rainy Night" or "Three Rainy Nights"—whichever it's going to be, under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

"West Point" Kenyon Film

"WEST POINT," with William Haines and Joan Crawford, will be the screen feature in the New Kenyon Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The vaudeville acts will be Gene and Myrtle Moore, song and dance entertainers; Ambassador Crowley comedian, and the Brown and Bauer Revue. "The Love Mart," with Billie Dove, will be seen the last three days of the week. The vaudeville will comprise Les Klicks, a novelty act; Fair and Clear, two comedians, and the George Martin Wallace Revue.

Sigrid Onegin To Sing Here

SIGRID ONEGIN, Metropolitan Opera contralto, will give a concert in the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association Monday night. Madame Onegin made her debut in Berlin in 1912. Her program will include an aria, "Away From Mourning and Crying," from "Orpheus and Eurydice," by Gluck; Impromptu in A flat by Chopin; two groups of English and German folk songs; "Scene Et Rondo," from Billet de Loterie, by Nicolo Isouard, and several other numbers.

RETURNS

GLORIA SWANSON returns to Pittsburgh Monday and will be seen on the Cameraphone screen as "Sadie Thompson."

Virginia Valli Sheridan Star

"LADIES MUST DRESS" will open a three-day run in the Sheridan Square Monday. It features Virginia Valli and Lawrence Gray and was written and directed by Victor Heerman. The cast includes Earle Foxe, Nancy Carroll and Hallam Cooley. Miss Valli, as a stenographer in a big department store, acquits herself creditably in a very difficult role, it is pointed out. In many of the sequences she has to wear old-fashioned clothing and maintain a restraint both sympathetic and convincing, it is said.

Friday Concert By Gieskíng

WALTER GIESKING, pianist, is to give a concert Friday evening, February 17, in Carnegie Music Hall, under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Art Society. The program includes: Partita B dur No. 1, J. S. Bach; Sonata C sharp minor, Op. 27, No. 2, Beethoven; Etudes Symphonique, Op. 12, Schumann; Three Moments Musicaux, Schubert; Ballade A flat major, Chopin; Soiree dans Granade, Debussy; La Cathedrale Engloutie, Poissons D'Or; Ondine, Maurice Ravel.

Her beauty is a direct inheritance from her French and Spanish forebears. Her skin is creamy velvet. Her hair is dark. (For her—Nude Powder, Medium Bloom.)

determines her type, decides the shade of her powder and rouge

By MME. JEANNETTE de CORDET

IS she a brunette—because her eyes and hair are dark? Are you blonde—because your eyes are blue and your hair light? It would be as sensible to say that a Patou frock is always made of velvet, a Lanvin of taffeta.

Hair and eyes do not determine the type—but the tone of the skin does. There are as many gradations of types among beautiful women as there are hues in the rainbow. Among American girls there are more variations than among those of any other nation. There's the silvery blonde descended from the Norsemen—the golden blonde from the Saxons—the dramatic dark beauty who traces her heritage to Latin ancestry.

Perhaps you are a pure type—or it may be that characteristics and colorings from several races are intermingled in you. The most effective thing you can do for yourself is to find your true type and dress accordingly—wear the colors that are most becoming, and use the shades and tones of powder and rouge that most nearly suit your natural skin-tone.

Pompeian Beauty Powder comes in five lovely, natural shades—shades that exactly match the typical skin-tones. But, in addition, fifteen other beautiful shades of powder can be created by mixing various combinations of these primary shades—so that even the most exceptional skin-tones can be matched. And among the tones of Pompeian Bloom there is one that will blend so perfectly with your own coloring as to give the final touch of individuality to your type.

DRESDEN-CHINA BLONDE

She is a combination of pink and blue and white. Her skin is white as alabaster through which the faintest pink is shining. Her eyes are blue. (For her—White Pompeian Powder and Light Bloom.)

AUBURN BEAUTY

Her hair is reddish brown. Her eyes exactly match her hair. They look like sherry they are so limpid, and so nearly of its color. (For her—2 parts Nude to 1 part Flesh-Pink Powder and Orange Bloom.)

Owen Davis' Son Also Added to Studios' Staff of Authors.

RECOGNIZING the fact that only from strong stories can good motion pictures be made, Paramount executives have added to their scenarists a new group of writers with wide and varying backgrounds of experience as an important move in their 1928 production program.

The new writers bring with them knowledge gained from experience in the theatrical business, collegiate careers, and metropolitan newspaper work. All of them have demonstrated ability as story constructionists.

"The public has come to demand story quality in motion pictures," B. P. Schulberg, the associate producer, declared in announcing the new writers. "It has always been Paramount's aim to produce only pictures that had a story worth telling. Creations of these stories and the adaptation of famous novels and stage successes for the screen is an all important part of picture production."

The new writers come from widely varied fields. Louis Gasnier is well known in both Europe and America. His plays and stories made him famous in France. In this country he is better known as a producer and director.

O. H. P. Garett comes from five years work as a reporter with the New York World. Before that he was a reporter with the Globe and the Sun. He also has written successful fiction.

Norman Burnstine is a Columbia University graduate and during his college days was editor of the humorous publication. He has written successful short stories and was awarded a $1,000 literary prize upon his graduation.

George Watters has gained his knowledge of the show business from that best of teachers, experience. He started playing on the stage when he was 4 years old and he has been in some phase of the business ever since. He is co-author of "Burlesque," current on Broadway.

John Farrow is one of the young writers who have forged rapidly to the front during the past year. Farrow is only 23 years old but he already has a list of picture successes to his credit. Donald Davis, son of Owen Davis, the novelist and playwright is another one of the young writers recently added to the Paramount staff. He grew up in a literary and theatrical atmosphere.

George Kates, Julian Moss and Robert S. Carr are the other new writers added to the organization.

Town Rebuilt for Barthelmess' "Chad" Film

The town of Frankfort, (Ky.) of 75 years ago has been rebuilt in all its glory and chivalry at First National Studios in California.

The dusty streets, the old-fashioned stores, newspaper offices, tavern, horse-auction and all the small town features of that period are reproduced in exact detail for Richard Barthelmess in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

This is the picturization of John Fox, Jr.'s immortal story of the Kentucky hills in the Civil war days. Barthelmess, who plays "Chad," the hero of the story, makes his first visit to a town in Frankfort, and the scenes in the village show his reactions to a "city" of that time.

While Southern belles walk up and down the sidewalks colored roustabouts haul cotton in their donkey carts, an auction sale of horses is in progress and other activities of the village are shown. Barthelmess enters the scene awe-stricken at the new wonders unfolded before his eyes, and slowly walks the length of the main street.

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" is an Alfred Santell production. Molly O'Day is seen opposite Barthelmess and the cast also includes such well-known players as Claude Gillingwater, David Torrence, Gardner James, Victor Potel, Martha Mattox, Doris Dawson, Nelson McDowell, Ralph Lewis, Mark Hamilton, Ralph Yearsley, William Bertram, Walter Rogers and many others.

'BROADWAY' COMPLETES LONG RUN

By JOSEPH MULVANEY,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.

TONIGHT "Broadway" backs off Broadway with a long run to its credit and a record of more than $1,000,000 made for its youthful producers and authors—Jed Harris, Crosby Gaige, George Abbott and Philip Dunning. The first was a press agent before this nugget was unearthed. The last was a stage manager.

Only 12 other plays in the history of Metropolitan drama have run so long—"Abie's Irish Rose," "Lightnin'," "The Bat," "The First Year," "Seventh Heaven," "White Cargo," "Peg O' My Heart," "East Is West," "A Trip to Chinatown," "Rain," "Is Zat So" and "Adonis." As for receipts, "Broadway" ranks third. The melodrama swings out on the subway circuit next week, going to Brooklyn for an auspicious start. "The International" also passes out and "It Is to Laugh" has gone.

Of the new shows this week, "Rain Or Shine," the musical comedy with Joe Cook, Tom Howard and Nancy Welford, and "Sunny Days," with Lynne Overman and Frank MacIntyre, stood out foremost. The revival of "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was deemed interesting. "Atlas and Eva" was conceded to have its moments. "Meek Mose," a Negro play, was declared to be weak. "The Silent House" proved a meaty melodrama of English extraction.

The season is slipping fast. The incoming attractions next week include "These Modern Women," with Chrystal Herne; "Hot Pan," a Provincetown play; "Hoboken Blues," a new Playwrights' comedy, also staged in Greenwich Village, and a return engagement of "The Shanghai Gesture."

What New York needs is fewer and better plays than this season has brought forth thus far.

Melody On Stage

roused fierce controversy. Nazimova is well remembered as an an exponent of Ibsen's erratic heroines—especially Hedda Gabler and Hilda Wangel. There was always an alien and exotic tang to her interpretations, and she should be able to give a colorful portrait of a Hindu type—whatever it may be she has extracted from the Mayo volume.

Whatever it may be, it is apt to be tinged with tragedy and sorrow, which will not lure the followers of the gayer Muse from "The Student Prince" or "Honeymoon Lane." But the admirers of fine acting will flock to see Nazimova.

Ha! Adolphe Joins Army

ADOLPHE MENJOU, after dress suit and stiff shirt roles running back almost as far as the memory of man, appears in uniform as a dashing French officer in his next picture, "The Code of Honor."

Film Well and Keep Well Are Cardinal Rules in Hollywood

Screen Beauties Spend Thirty Minutes Daily In Physical Exercises.

THE first commandment of Hollywood is "film well" and the second is like unto it, "keep fit." These cardinal rules constitute a policy which, if carried to a successful conclusion, results in one's name in electric lights on Broadway.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios is doing much to keep its players and executives in the "pink" of condition.

John De Palma and Andrew Anderson, two physical experts, are now under contract to the M-G-M organization for no other purpose than to advise and help the stars and executives to take the right road to perfect health.

For the general guidance of the players, Anderson has evolved a series of exercises—not the old "daily dozen" but a new and carefully prepared schedule which is faithfully followed by Norma Shearer, Greta Garbo, Marion Davies, Joan Crawford, Renee Adoree, Marceline Day, and all the other players. Thirty minutes a day are devoted to the practice of the exercises which offer the surest road to the maintenance of perfect figures and the reduction of superfluous flesh.

According to Anderson, all players are warned of the dangers of unwise dieting and all quack methods of taking off unwanted flesh. Normal and regular exercise is relied on more than diet to maintain the perfect figure. A normal amount of adequate food with sufficient variety is advocated by Anderson as being better than patent diets for good health.

When a player is signed by the studio, her physical condition is gone over. A nervous breakdown or physical disablement during the production of a picture would cost the company thousands of dollars, so this factor is carefully considered. After the candidate for screen honors is found in perfect health, she is then advised whether or not she can do anything to improve her figure by way of special exercises and massages.

As a result of such methods, illness on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot is an extreme rarity, players live longer and more successful screen lives, production costs are decreased and everyone

Hale Again With Boyd

WILLIAM BOYD is to have Alan Hale in the featured supporting role again. Upon the completion of "Skyscraper," Hale is to play Boyd's next starring vehicle, "The Cop." Alan Hale played a comedy role in "Skyscraper" and returns to a heavy characterization in "The Cop."

COWBOY

BUCK JONES is coming to the Harris screen in his new photoplay, "Blood Will Tell."

MELODRAMA THRILLS WIN IN PICTURES

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 11.

ANY seasoned veteran of the press will tell you that a sensational murder trial will rate more readers than the best editorial ever penned. Last year the men who handle the destiny of the silent drama were amazed to learn that stories of murders and the underworld gave them the best returns at the box office.

Perhaps I shouldn't say the best, for people love to laugh, and clever comedies always have and always will rate as the most popular form of screen entertainment. Eliminating the comedies, and taking in every other form of drama, mystery tales last year brought a flattering return to their producers.

Mystery melodrama was formerly considered beyond the pale of possibility as screen entertainment. "The Cat and The Canary," one of Broadway's sensational successes, was purchased by Universal. To the surprise of everyone, all the suspense, the horrible nightmarish effect of the haunted house and the specter of the old man was as adequately expressed on the screen as on the stage. "The Gorilla," the difficult combination of mystery and comedy, left no regrets in the minds of those who saw it.

While Universal and First National had two well known plays in "The Cat and The Canary" and "The Gorilla," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer went a step further. Tod Browning wrote his own mystery melodrama. His "London After Midnight," as gruesome as any of Edgar Allan Poe's tales of the Rue Morgue, has crowded every theater where it has played.

"Underworld," a story of Chicago gangsters, brought its director, Joseph Von Sternberg, a bonus of $10,000 as the most successful—speaking in terms of dollars and cents—picture of the year.

"Chicago" is a murder play without a mystery. It has a vein of satire built around the old theory that a pretty woman can commit almost any crime and go free. Roxie, the heroine, who kills her lover, capitalizes on the publicity given her. The film version brings all that out but in the end she is made to suffer for her sins.

On the stage there was no retribution. But the movies are far too young and in too experimental a stage to trifle with such an unhallowed finale. Roxie pays the penalty for her crime.

Apparently this attitude hasn't hurt "Chicago," for Cecil De Mille has purchased another murder thriller, "Tenth Avenue," one of Broadway's successes hinges on a murder committed in an underworld boarding house. Phyllis Haver, the Roxie of "Chicago," plays the landlady in "Tenth Avenue."

There are other murder thrills on the calendar. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer furnished a grand murder in "China Bound." Ramon Novarro's next picture. Paramount is letting Adolphe Menjou surround himself with real melodrama in "Captain Farriol." Even that queen of flappers, Clara Bow, is having a little flare at a murder story in "Ladies of the Mob."

Emil Jannings, hero of "The Patriot," is himself murdered. "The Bellamy Trial" is a murder mystery. "Dressed to Kill" gives Mary Astor a chance to play a female crook. She steals everything from ermine coats to money.

Psychologists needn't view this tendency towards murder melodramas with any misgiving. It is no indication that the world is going from bad to worse. We cannot even philosophize on the madness of this generation as the direct or indirect cause of this taste in literature. There has always been a market for a good mystery story.

Victor Over Horse in Race Gets Film Job

Noble Johnson, whose endurance once put a horse to shame, and whose theatrical career has been long and varied, has been selected to play the role of the mysterious thug in Esther Ralston's latest starring production, "Something Always Happens," a melodramatic farce.

Johnson gained considerable publicity in 1909 for his exploits in running against a horse. He outran a horse, covering the 42 miles between Cripple Creek and Colorado Springs, between 2 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

TERRY STAR IN BRITISH PICTURE

REX INGRAM, the American film director, has signed a contract in London with Louis Blattner of the International Distributing Trust, Ltd., providing for Mr. Ingram to make one British production in which his wife, Alice Terry, will be starred and which United Artists Corporation will distribute throughout the world. The announcement was made from the home office of United Artists in New York.

Mr. Ingram directed "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Scaramouche," "Mare Nostrum," "The Garden of Allah" and other films.

He will direct personally the new production, which is to be photographed in an English studio, camera work to be begun in six weeks. An all-English cast of players will surround Miss Terry. United Artists said Mr. Ingram is considering three stories and he has not yet decided which narrative he will transfilm into his first United Artists picture, though the new film will be a spectacle. More money has been appropriated for production of the new Ingram picture than has ever been spent on an English-made cinema, according to United Artists.

For three years Rex Ingram has made his films in Europe, preferring not to work in Hollywood. So complete has been the director's isolation from America that it was recently rumored this son of an Irish Protestant clergyman would abandon all organized Anglo-Saxon cults and become a Mohammedan. Mr. Ingram's studios at Nice have served him for interior scenes, while actual locales in whatever country was a story's background have been his exterior settings. Once each year, Mr. Ingram sent to America a completed Ingram-Metro-Goldwyn film, and it was exhibited on Broadway at $2 prices. The old contract having expired, a new one was signed whereby United Artists will distribute the new Rex Ingram production.

It was Mr. Ingram who brought Rudolph Valentino forward to fame in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the late June Mathis having recommended the young Italian. Now, after the lapse of some years, Mr. Ingram joins the company for which Valentino was making pictures when he died. Had the screen star lived, an executive of United Artists said, it would have been inevitable that he be starred in another Rex Ingram film destined to surpass "The Four Horsemen."

Nagel Is Happy; At Last He's a Villain

Conrad Nagel has gone to the bad! This will undoubtedly shock the young women who have admired Nagel's pleasant, boyish smile and his charming manner, but the truth will out.

The amazing thing about this is that Nagel has designedly and deliberately gone bad and with abundant time to think of the consequences. For some time he has yearned to be downright wicked. He had been so good, the Little Lord Fauntleroy of so many pictures, that thoughts of the saccharine qualities of manhood which he had spread over the screen caused him to shudder. His very goodness hurt.

"Oh, if I could only be a villain!" he exclaimed one day in the Warner Bros. studios in the hearing of Jack L. Warner.

"Huh," came from the executive head, "we'll fix that all right," and promptly saw to it that the actor was cast as the master crook in Dolores Costello's new feature picture, "Tenderloin."

In this picture the handsome leading man plays a despicable villain who lures the heroine into a net of crime. A bank bandit with a gun ever ready to shoot, and a contempt for life and law, he is about as tough a specimen of well-dressed humanity as the world of crime contains.

STAR OF BARRIE FILM

MARION DAVIES plays the role of Phoebe Throssel in the film version of James M. Barrie's famous play, "Quality Street," soon to be on view in Pittsburgh. A complete house, with surrounding gardens, was specially erected, on a great stage of the Metro-Goldwin-Mayers studios for this Cosmopolitan production in order to get the exact atmosphere of the Barrie play.

Marion Davies' New Film Has Settings That Win Approval

Furnishings in "Quality Street" May Be Reflected in New Homes.

Interior decorators and architects who have seen the exquisite settings of "Quality Street," the Sir James Barrie play in which Marion Davies is to appear on the screen here soon, declare that this picture will find its reflection in hundreds of splendid homes to be built soon in this country.

The entire six rooms and the walled gardens of the home sequences of this production are based on the early Georgian period of provincial England. A few of the furnishings, such as the spinet, are French, but just enough to show the influence of that nation just across the Channel.

To the $250,000 worth of antique furniture and bric-a-brac, Miss Davies added nearly $100,000 worth of furnishings from her summer home at Santa Monica, Cal., and Director Sidney Franklin contributed a beautiful set of miniatures and objects of art from his private collection of the Georgian era.

The original furniture is of three makes of that period—Hepplewhite, Sheridan and Chippendale. It consists of beds, cabinets, buffets, tables, chairs, stools, window boxes and elaborate wooden chests.

Many of these pieces were imported some years ago by Miss Davies to furnish her summer home, which has been furnished entirely in the early Georgian period.

The spinet is French and almost 200 years old. It originally belonged to the famous Dupont family in Paris and is still in a remarkable state of preservation for an instrument of that age.

Molly O'Day Plays Lead

MOLLY O'DAY, leading woman for Richard Barthelmess in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," a First National picture, is now making some of the most strenuous scenes in the story while on location in the mountains.

Child Star With Pola

LITTLE Joyce Marie Coad, who played the child role in Clara Bow's recent picture, "Children of Divorce," and in Florence Vidor's "One Woman to Another," will play in Pola Negri's next picture, "Three Sinners."

TAKING PART IN CLUB PLAY

MRS. H. E. CARMACK will have a role in one of the plays which the drama section of the Wilkinsburg Women's Club will give in Masonic Temple.

A ROLE IN "Ever Young" is to be portrayed by Mrs. W. C. Graham, also a member of the recently organized drama section of the Wilkinsburg club.

Patricia Pitt Says:

"Palm Beach Reminds Local Social Set of A Junior Pittsburgh"

HAVE you taken a look at this coming week's social calendar and noticed its total blankness? And that's not the worst of it! One can hardly expect matters to "liven up" much until after Lent—and that is quite a while. Down in the Southern resorts there are lots of parties, but that doesn't help much here.

Palm Beach is really almost a junior Pittsburgh these days, and its beach must look a great deal like home to those who are lucky enough to be there. The J. Francis Burkes have arrived at the Breakers for their customary stay, and are taking part in all the activities of the resort. Mr. Burke is known there, as here, as one of the best of the after dinner speakers, and he also is an officer of the exclusive Bath and Tennis Club. The Burkes have a cabana there and go daily for a swim and luncheon.

The Herbert DuPuys, who are also at the Breakers, were among the guests at a dinner which Mrs. Henry C. Phipps gave Monday night in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Sidney C. Partridge, who are guests of Mrs. Robert C. Black, and Charles Massinger, the tenor.

Kirks Give Luncheon

We also hear of a luncheon which Mrs. David M. Kirk, of Sewickley Heights, gave on Wednesday in the Orange Gardens of the Everglades Club. Among the guests were Mrs. Kirk's daughter, Mrs. Robina Kirk Quinby; Mrs. James G. Pontefract, Mrs. Franklin P. Smith, Mrs. William F. Bode and Mrs. John Edwin Dietz. Mrs. Pontefract has leased a house on Australian avenue for the season, and she will be joined there by her son-in-law and daughter, the W. S. Charnleys, of Sewickley, who are to arrive this week.

Another social affair given there was the dinner at which Mrs. Henry R. Rea was hostess on Tuesday at her winter home, "Lagomar." She had as her guests of honor Mr. and Mrs. Saxham Drury, of New York, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury. Murray Smith appeared during the evening, as well as Zanoni, the well-known psychologist.

Sewickley Parties

A FEW small parties were held during the week in Sewickley. On Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. W. Dickinson Shields, of Chestnut road, gave a bridge tea in her home. Mrs. Arthur Wagner and Mrs. James E. Umbstaetter poured tea. Then, on the following day, Mrs. Charles L. Hamilton gave a bridge party in her home for her house guest, Miss Lydia Thompson, of Louisville, Ky.

Back from Baltimore and Atlantic City are the Harris R. Potters and their daughter, Susan, of Frederick avenue. They returned home on Thursday after spending a fortnight in the East.

ANOTHER February 4 wedding was that of Miss Amelia Katherine Behrhorst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Behrhorst, of Avalon, and Jason E. Stone, Jr., of Mt. Lebanon.

Dunnington Wedding

WIDE-SPREAD interest was aroused this week by the announcement of the marriage of June Dunnington, daughter of the William C. Dunningtons, of Washington, D. C., and William Dermitt Grimes, of South Negley avenue. The wedding took place on the first day of February, and Mr. Grimes and his bride are now traveling in the East. They will live in South Negley avenue.

Mr. Grimes is the father of Mrs. William Booth, of Sewickley, and of Murray Bell Grimes, whose engagement to Virginia Corbus Patterson was announced not long ago.

PREVIOUS to her marriage on February 2, Mrs. John W. Lewis was Miss Mary Johnston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Johnston, of Aylesboro avenue, Squirrel Hill.

Princeton Boys Return

SEVERAL Princeton boys went back to college on Wednesday evening after spending the mid-year vacation with their families in Sewickley. Among them were E. Harris Harbison and his brother, Samuel Harbison; John Richardson and Putnam Goldsbury.

Miss McKean Weds

ANOTHER wedding just announced, in which many Pittsburghers are interested, is that of Mary Elizabeth McKean, daughter of the William Cooke McKeans, of Uniontown, and Frederick Knightley Hogg, son of Mrs. William Hogg, of St. Davids, Pa. They were married on Wednesday in the chapel of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, by the Rev. Dr. Henry Howard.

CAPITAL BECOMES NATION'S SARTORIAL MOUTHPIECE

State Receptions Disclose Guests As Fashion Plates

By GEORGINA WASHINGTON,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.

HOW this country is evolving sartorially! Paris coutouriers come over here, look around, and declare that the American woman is the best dressed in the world. Well, she is, judging from the way she appears in Washington, which, after all, is the country's mouthpiece in this business as in others.

The capital, you might say, is not really a typical American city in this matter of clothes, because the women seen at parties are mostly the creme of foreign and domestic society and have the money to dress accordingly.

That is very true; but a pretty good cross-section of American urban and rural citizenry can be found here, too. For what is the congressional set but just that — plain American folks, typical of their communities!

And how the congressional ladies have advanced in style! Why, at the state reception given for Congress at the White House the other night, the wives and daughters of senators and representatives, whose name was legion, were veritable fashion plates. You should have seen them!

Club Is Big Help

The congressional club also has done a lot to "bring out" its members. The little Kansas lady may come to Washington very frightened and very old-timey in her home-made togs. But it is not long before association with other congressional wives at their clubhouse has taught her the sartorial amenities, as well as a certain amount of poise.

Going back to the reception to Congress, it was, as I have said, a wonderfully "dressed" affair, and the largest and most democratic levee of the state "season."

I could go on at length describing the beautiful gowns that passed by. But I will tarry over only three—all reds in a riot of bright colors.

Mrs. Coolidge herself had on one of the three. It was a chiffon velvet affair in a luscious shade somewhere between American Beauty and rose. The skirt was made in tiers, longer in back, and a long court train, fan-shaped at the end, fell from the shoulders.

The bodice was slightly bloused and girdled with rhinestones. A charming touch was the matching of the slippers, made of the material of the gown.

Mrs. Dwight Davies, wife of the Secretary of War, wore American Beauty taffeta with great puffs of the silk over the hips and a narrow skirt with a brief train.

Like Mrs. Coolidge, Mrs. Everett Sanders, wife of the President's secretary, was in red velvet, the gown being simply made with a yoke and girdle of embroidery in gold, rhinestones and pearls.

To Marry Local Man

MISS MABEL HERMAN'S engagement to Morris N. Schaeffer, of Pittsburgh, was announced this week by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. Herman, of Shreveport, La. The wedding will take place next Sunday in Shreveport.

Stone Nuptials

ELLEN STONE'S wedding to Charles Chester Bailey was the week's only large social event, and a very pretty wedding it was, too. The ceremony was performed Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the Sixth Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Dr. Henry H. Forsyth, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Edgar Jones, rector of St. Thomas' Memorial Episcopal Church of Oakmont.

Ellen, who is the daughter of the Stephen Stones, of Forbes street, wore a gown of white satin fashioned in bolero effect, with a draped skirt and embroidered with pearls. Her veil was of tulle and rose point lace, caught with a cap of the lace and orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white lilacs, silver wedding roses, Cattleya orchids and lilies of the valley.

Her three sisters were included in her attendants, Marian being maid of honor and Mrs. Sydney Stewart and Mrs. James Shirley Austin matrons of honor. Marian wore coral crepe with a draped skirt, and with it she wore a hat of felt to match. She carried butterfly roses, fresia and silver wedding roses. The matrons of honor had gowns in a slightly deeper shade of coral, with hats to correspond, and their flowers were Dresden bouquets.

A quite deep shade of the coral was used for the bridesmaids frocks. They, of course, wore hats to match their gowns, also, and carried Dresden bouquets. The girls were Ellen McClay, Elinor Munroe and Martha Green, of Pittsburgh; Cassandra Stewart, of Baltimore; Dorothy Vilas, of Chicago, and Ruth Jones, of New York.

Wilson Bailey was his brother's best man and the ushers included James Shirley Austin, Sydney Stewart, Morris Scott Verner, Jr., Maxwell McCreery and Alexander Johnson Robertson, all of Pittsburgh; Howard Levi, of Evansville, Ind.; Thompson Morris Wakeley, of Chicago; Rogey Wolcott Hooker, of Niagara Falls, and Howard Stanley Judd, of New York.

A reception and dinner supplemented the ceremony and later the new Mr. and Mrs. Bailey left for an extended trip. They expect to live in Pittsburgh after their return.

Margaret Head Engaged

BOTH Pittsburghers and Greensburgers were much interested this week in the announcemcht of Margaret Head's engagement to William Donaldson Stewart, Jr., son of the William D. Stewarts, of the Shore road, Pelham Manor, New York. Margaret, you know, is the daughter of Mrs. Morris W. Head, who used to live in Wellesley avenue but is now in New Rochelle, N. Y. She is, too, a granddaughter of the late Justice John B. Head, of Greensburg. The man she is to marry is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania with the 1924 class. They are planning to be married in the fall, according to the announcement.

Honor Bride-to-Be

FORSYTH PATTERSON, who is engaged to marry David Meade Gilmore, son of the Edward D. Gilmores, of Sewickley, was the guest of honor at a luncheon on Tuesday afternoon which was given by Mrs. R. Raymond Freeman, Jr., in her home in Sewickley place. Forsyth is a daughter of the Charles F. Pattersons, of Sewickley.

Mary Snyder to Wed

ONE of the engagements announced during the week was that of Mary Muriel Snyder, daughter of Mrs. H. Kilbourne Snyder, of Fifth avenue, to Murry Verner Jennings, who is a son of the late Edward H. Jennings and Mrs. Jennings, of Pittsburgh and Lakewood-on-Chautauqua, N. Y. No date has been chosen for the wedding.

Luncheon Planned By Club

THE home economics department of Dormont New Century Club will present a special program before the club next Friday afternoon in Dormont Masonic Hall.

Mrs. Archie C. John, Mrs. John M. Morris and Mrs. J. C. Owens will be hostesses tomorrow afternoon for the dramatic department meeting in the Women's City Club. The business and program will be preceded by a luncheon at 1 o'clock at which the executive board members will be guests. Under the direction of Mrs. Joseph N. Orbin, department program chairman, a play will be read and studied and soprano solos will be sung by Mrs. Phil A. Franklin, Mrs. J. W. Young, Jr., accompanying.

The literary department will meet Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Homer Adams, of Gaylord avenue. Joint hostesses will be Mrs. C. N. Harper and Mrs. H. C. Stevens. Mrs. Charles B. Phillips will discuss current events and Mrs. Donald Maxwell will review Millay's "The King's Henchman." Mrs. G. B. Roberts, chairman of the education committee, is in charge of arrangements for the scholarship loan fund benefit bridge to be held Thursday night in Hillsdale school.

Service Legion To Hold Lunch

ALLEGHENY COUNTY COUNCIL, Service Star Legion, will hold its annual luncheon on Thursday in the Congress of Clubs. Mrs. Esther Newman has charge of arrangements.

To Be Married

MISS MARY JANE CLARK, president of the Business and Professional Women's Club, and James W. Myers, of Crafton, will be married quietly in Trinity Episcopal Church Monday at 5 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. Percy G. Kammerer, rector of Trinity, where Miss Clark is parish secretary, will perform the ceremony in the presence of only the two families and B. P. W. members.

Selects Date for Wedding

MISS OLIVE EILEEN FLANAGAN, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Flanagan, of North Euclid avenue, has selected next Saturday as the date for her marriage to John S. S. Fessenden, of Washington, son of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Fessenden, of Newark, O. The ceremony will be performed at 10 o'clock in the Rittenhouse by Dr. Fessenden, who was formerly pastor of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church here. Miss Elva Flanagan will be her sister's maid of honor and Sylvester Rynearson will be best man. Mr. and Mrs. Fessenden will make their home in Washington. Miss Flanagan shared honors with her sister, Mrs. Charles L. Jones, and Miss Harriet L. Jones at a tea given yesterday by Mrs. P. N. Jones in her home in South Atlantic avenue.

East End Girl Weds In Church

THE marriage of Miss Frances Antoinette Fitzsimmons, of Baum boulevard, and Paul C. Gannon, of South Atlantic avenue, was solemnized Wednesday morning in Sacred Heart Catholic Church by the Rev. Thomas F. Coakley. The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Thomas A. Fitzsimmons, wore peach chiffon embroidered with rhinestones, with a hat to match, and carried white lilacs and yellow roses. Miss Laura Fitzsimmons, as her sister's maid of honor, appeared in rose beige chiffon with hat to match, and her flowers were daffodils, roses and snapdragon. Charles F. Gannon was his brother's best man and the ushers included Raymond J. Gannon and J. Irwin Bowman. Mr. and Mrs. Gannon have sailed for a trip to Bermuda and after March 1 will be at home in Callowhill street.

Forest Hills Club To Hear Educator

RAY E. HURD, a member of the faculty of Shady Side Academy, will address the Women's Club of Forest Hills Thursday afternoon on "Play, Players and the Audience." Mrs. E. B. Newill, of Bryn Mawr road, will be hostess, assisted by Mrs. Graham Bright, Mrs. J. W. W. Ow and Mrs. W. E. Sionaker. The home economics committee, under the chairmanship of Mrs. W. W. Reddie, will give a luncheon Tuesday afternoon, February 21, at the home of Mrs. E. B. Sampson, Forest Hills road. Mrs. Allan D. Kirk will read a play.

Miss Thurston to Entertain Colony

IN THE Thurston Preparatory School tomorrow the Pittsburgh Colony of New England Women will have its February meeting with Miss Alice M. Thurston as hostess. Mrs. W. H. Parrish will give a travel talk and a short play, "Pioneer Life in Our Early Colonies," will be presented by the primary department of the school, the program also including solo dances by Ruth Talbott. Mrs. Irvin D. Metzger will be chairman of the tea hour.

Central 'Y' Branch Plans Activities

"THE UNDISCOVERED YOU," a new type of personal study will be presented in a series of lectures by outstanding men and women in the new term of classes which opens at Central Branch Y. W. C. A. this week. The department of education is, in addition, offering a full schedule of classes in English, music, languages, commercial subjects, arts and crafts, beauty culture and homemaking. Classes of general interest are also planned. Current events, psychology, "The House That Jane Built," "Science Everyone Wants to Know," and others. The forum suppers will continue every Tuesday at 6 o'clock and in the department of health education new classes will be opened also.

Jessie Thorp to Wed E. W. Fiske, Jr.

Face Peeler Keeps Skin Young

To maintain a clear, white, youthful complexion, there's nothing so simple to use and yet so effective as ordinary mercolized wax, which you can get at any drug store. Just apply the wax at night as you would cold cream. It causes the old worn-out scarf skin to come off in tiny particles, a little at a time, and soon you have entirely shed the offensive cuticle. The fresh, young underskin now in evidence is healthy and girlish looking and free from any appearance of artificiality. To quickly remove wrinkles and age signs, use as face lotion 1 ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

many of whom have been constantly writing of other women's activities, have kept no record of their own club events and only from the memory chests of the various members can any information be got concerning the early days of the organization. Into these treasure chests, however, there has been considerable delving within the last few weeks, for at the dinner tomorrow night the publication, "The Waste Basket," which occasionally makes its appearance at these annual affairs, will be issued again, and will contain reminiscences and bits of almost forgotten history.

According to a preamble in the first copies of the constitution and by-laws the club was formed February 7, 1891, in the office of the Commercial Gazette by Janey Mulhern Coard (now Mrs. A. W. Smith, Jr.,) Virginia D. Hyde, who was the first president; Bell McElhany, Cara Rese (the actual founder); Kathleen Hussey Watson, Clara M. Walmer and Carrie L. Wetherell, the preamble stating, "It having become evident from the increasing number of women employed on the press of the city, and the widening sphere of their usefulness in journalistic work, that organization would inure to their benefit in that it would tend to promote the interchange of opinion, conduce to encouragement and strengthen professional standing."

Charter Members

The club was not, however, granted a charter until seven years later and one finds the charter members including Maria DeSales Coyle (Mrs. William Fleming Abel), Anna R. Stratton, Anna Mynott Docking, Sarah H. Killikelly, Mrs. George Sheppard, Mrs. H. B. Montreville, Eleanor H. Birch, Mary Temple Jamieson, Matilda Orr Hays, Elvira Wilson Albert, Ida L. Easton, Mary B. Orr, Mae Goff Smith, Mrs. R. J. DeVore, Mrs. Joseph D. Weeks, Cornelia B. Foulk and Janey M. Coard. The club, which has survived the vicissitudes of nearly two score years, and has numbered in its family women of varying degrees of fame in the literary world, now has about 40 active and 10 associate members and one honorary member, who is Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart. The active members are those who are or have been regularly on the staff of a representative newspaper and the associates, those who have done other literary work for which they have received remuneration. At the beginning all women interested in journalistic work either directly or indirectly, through relationship to proprietors or editors, were eligible to associate membership.

Writes Recollections

... Stratton, who is now making her home in Gary, W. Va., writes her recollections as follows: "There were few newspaper women in Pittsburgh in 1891 and their route was a harder one than today, for the offices had but one telephone and the women, when they received their assignments, were expected to walk to Allegheny or the South Side or to take the cable cars to East Liberty. In its early days the club entertained a number of famous women. Mme. Franziska Janauschek, the distinguished Bohemian tragic actress, was once its guest. There were no other women writers in Pittsburgh 100 years ago when Jane Grey Swisshelm wrote her bold and aggressive articles and became recognized as the pioneer literary woman of Western Pennsylvania. Nor did Bessie Bramble (Mrs. Charles I. Wade) have co-workers when she gave her pungent comments to the press 50 years ago. In the late 80's Nellie Bly stopped for a short time only in Pittsburgh on her way from her home in the Alleghany Mountains near Conemaugh to New York City and her spectacular trip around the world, so that she did not make a strong impression on the Pittsburgh newspaper world.

First Women Writers

"Cara Reese was the first woman to firmly establish herself on the Pittsburgh newspapers, a position which she held in one capacity or other for more than 30 years, in fact, until her death, writing first for the Commercial Gazette, where she held a staff position for 15 years, and then being employed as a reporter, staff correspondent or special writer with every large newspaper in the city. Later there was Virginia Hyde, with the Pittsburgh Times, who afterwards married and went to Colorado. For several years they were the only woman writers, and then Mrs. H. B. Birch, of the Bulletin; Caroline Wetherell, of the Telegraph, and Janey Coard, of the Press, joined the ranks, Mrs. Wade and Mrs. Mary A. Wallace, ('Aunt Patience' of the Press) were writing at intervals."

Mrs. Smith, the Janey Coard of the old days, in her memory travels back to the birth of the Press Club recalls Adelaide Nevin, whose family founded the Pittsburgh Leader and who had a page in that journal, and Mrs. Weeks, editor of the Temperance Tribune, "who kept us straight as to drinking only tea or coffee, cigarets not being even thought of then."

Mrs. Smith says it was when Helen Gardner, essayist and lecturer, came as the latter to Pittsburgh that the press women decided to give a dinner for her and afterwards through her inspiration, organized. She recalls that Helen Gardner, before her death last year, willed her brain to Columbia University for comparison with the brains of man. "A loveable, dynamic woman who always stirred people into action," Mrs. Smith terms her. Further she recalls: "Nary a literary celebrity came within hailing distance that we did not capture him or, preferably, her. And did we give a simple dinner or luncheon at $1.50? No, it was always a banquet at a leading hotel, with usually the mayor of the city sitting beside the guest of honor, and outstanding editors and literati bidding for tickets at $5 and $6 a plate."

Only One in State

In her search for data, Miss Matilda Orr Hays, though no longer affiliated with the Press Club, came across an article in "The American Youth," a magazine to which several members of the club apparently were regular contributors. This article by Mary Temple Bayard (Jamieson), the famous "Meg," which was written in 1897, says "Pittsburgh has the distinction of having the only woman's press club in the state of Pennsylvania. Everything has been predicted for it except that it will 'live long and prosper.' It was confidently expected that there would be bickerings, squabblings, dissensions and tears; and rather than disappoint any one the organization has fulfilled the prophecy and takes some measure of pride in it.

"Made up of real newspaper women, true to their training, a fight is any time preferable to stagnation and it is a club boast that it has the talent within itself to get up something in that line." Of Janey Coard, who was then president, Meg says in this same article, "She writes easily and gracefully and those who know her best believe she would not hesitate to spank a tiger with a broomstick if he stood in the way of her accomplishing what she had been sent to do in reportorial work." Marie Coyle's first story was accepted when she was 13 years of age and her beginning as a newspaper woman was made on the Pittsburgh Post as dramatic critic, the article states.

Some of the yellowed clippings unearthed for tomorrow's anniversary are, from the standpoint of modern journalism, ludicrous in their style, but in those days must have been of the greatest satisfaction to the people with whom they were concerned, so extravagant are they in their praise and space and so full and intimate in detail.

Describing anniversary banquets, the names of decorating firms are given and entire menus are printed. Among persons prominently mentioned, although they were not all club members, were Elise Mercur, architect, who designed the Women's Building for the Atlanta International Exposition; Jane King, said to have "managed" Chill Hazzard's Monongahela Republican; Miss R. Jennie DeVore, Mrs. Jane Hall, Mrs. Levi Bird Duff, Dr. Ella Goff, another who has long since turned in her "30" to the great City Editor, and Mrs. Dallas Albert (Ellice Serena). It is noted in one account that regrets were read from Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. William A. Herron and Miss Killikelly.

Two of the best loved and best known members the club ever admitted into its quite restricted circle were Mrs. Franklin P. Iams and Lillian Russell Moore, both of whom completed their "assignments" in this world within the past decade.

The present officers of the club are Mrs. Madeline Young Love, president; Mrs. Edith Taylor Thomson and Mrs. A. W. Smith, vice presidents; Miss Catherine M. Patterson, treasurer, and the writer, secretary.

Crowd Atlantic City For Lincoln Birthday

ATLANTIC CITY, Feb. 11.—Attracted by the prospects of spending a double holiday at the shore, thousands of residents of other cities are arriving to spend Lincoln's Birthday here. Hotel men report that their houses are comfortably filled, and railroad men report nearly all trains from New York and Philadelphia in two or more sections. The automobile invasion is even larger than in preceding years.

Although busy entertaining the holiday crowds, the hotel men are making efforts to land the Republican national convention, scheduled for June. Renewed hope that the convention might come to this city was expressed by National Committeeman Hamilton F. Kean at the dinner tendered to the members of the State Legislature at the Hotel Breakers last week by the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association. He said that the committee was by no means satisfied with the accommodations offered by Kansas City and change of meeting place was not at all unlikely.

H. Bradford Richmond, proprietor of the Hotel Strand and head of the association's convention committee, at once wired to the national committee promising them 10,000 hotel rooms and a suitable meeting place for the convention. While the new convention hall will not be completed by June, the city is erecting a temporary hall at a cost of $30,000 for the use of another convention and this, it is believed, will be suitable for the Republicans.

Work on the new convention hall, while somewhat delayed by the [illegible] snowfall of two weeks ago, is [illegible] pushed rapidly. The [illegible] which are to support [illegible] hall in [illegible] place, w[illegible] ade in the erection [illegible] on the Boardwalk end of [illegible] ding.

Pittsburghers who will return on the California are: Miss Elizabeth Bovard, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Burnap, John M. Diggs, Mrs. Charles H. Emery, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Herriott, Miss Hetty B. Jamison, Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Little, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Kincaide, Miss Helen S. McKeag, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Offutt, Cecil C. Schleihauf, Allen V. Holbrook, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Emery Schute, Miss Romaine Theakson, Miss Irma Theakson, Mr. and Mrs. L. Niles Trammell, H. G. Cannon and Miss Marie H. Cannon.

Reservations by the Diamond Bank are: Fairfax, Baltimore to Miami, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Albrecht, Mr and Mrs. Fred Lang; Minnekahda, New York to London, Miss Lillian Allman.

NORTH AFRICA CRUISES PROVE POPULAR HERE

Many Pittsburghers Sail on French Liner for Tour of Mediterranean, Morocco.

The Mediterranean-Moroccan cruises, a specialty which the French Line has been giving particular attention this year, have proved very popular in the United States, according to David Galwey, general agent of the French Line in Pittsburgh.

A number of prominent Pittsburghers were on board when the France sailed for North Africa last week. This is the second of three cruises for the France to the Mediterranean, and the ship was booked to capacity. The full cruise will last 30 days.

Those booked from Pittsburgh for the second cruise are: Mr. and Mrs. George I. Holdship, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pancoast, Mrs. Charles Wharton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett Oliver, Simon Patterson, Howard H. McClintic, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Ronald B. Crawford, Mrs. William Frew, Miss Lucian McKinley and Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Hirschfield.

'Others from the district are: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dieble and Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Dieble, of Youngstown, O.; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hoffstetter of Erie, and Mrs. and Mrs. E. S. Dunn, of Oil City, Pa.

The France sailed from New York after a stay of only 36 hours. This is thought to be a record turnaround for a steamer about to start a 30-day cruise. A number of the passengers will come back on the third cruise which will sail from New York March 14. A number of local bookings have already been made for it.

Pierre De Malglaive, general manager of the French Line in the United States and Canada, and Felix Lachesnez-Heude, general passenger traffic manager of the line, are expected in Pittsburgh this week as a part of a tour of inspection which will take them to all parts of the United States.

Cunard Is Booking For Steeplechase

The Grand National Steeplechase, one of England's racing classics, which will be held at Aintree, near Liverpool, March 30, is expected to draw many visitors from America. The Cunard Line is featuring the steeplechase on three sailings from New York, on the Caronia and Tuscania, March 17, and on the Aquitania, March 21. The Caronia will be held in Liverpool harbor as a floating hotel for the American visitors.

Eastern Stars Will Hold Tureen Supper

LOYALTY CHAPTER No. 343, O. E. S. will hold a tureen supper and card party Tuesday in the chapter room in the Odd Fellows' Temple, Fourth avenue. Supper will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock and cards will follow. Mrs. Bertha P. Fackiner is general chairman.

De Molay to Give Dance February 21

DUQUESNE CHAPTER, Order DeMolay, will hold a Washington's Birthday dance February 21 in the University Club. The committee in charge consists of R. W. Steenrod, H. Adams, P. Koesling, E. Ringer, A. Hudson and W. Fichter.

168, O. E. S., Plans Final Year's Event

WILLIAM PENN CHAPTER No. 168, O. E. S., will hold its final event of the year with a tureen dinner Thursday in Odd Fellows' Hall, Fourth avenue. Mrs. Cora May Will is general chairman.

December Bride

BEFORE her marriage December 28, Mrs. Anthony Caruso was Miss Isabel Fagassi, of Lincoln avenue, East End.

Florida Will Stage 2 Big Speed Events

Two big speed events stand out i t' program of sports scheduled at the Florida winter playgrounds. The first of these is the International Automobile Speed Classic which will be held at Daytona Beach, Fla., February 15 to 23, and the other is the fifteenth annual mid-winter regatta of the Miami Beach Yacht Club in Biscayne Bay.

The automobile races are sponsored by the Daytona Beach Chamber of Commerce and are sanctioned by the contest board of the American Automobile Association. There will be free-for-all speed trials for the world's straightaway mile record on the packed sands of the beach. Last year, Maj. Segrave, of England, set a new world's record with a speed of 203.79 miles an hour.

This year three drivers will attempt to lower his record. They are Capt. Malcolm Campbell, of England, driving a Napier "Bluebird Special"; Frank Lockhart, driving a Lockhart-Stutz special, and J. M. White, driving a three-motored car. There will also be three days of stock car trials.

Many of America's fastest speed boats will enter the regatta of the Miami Beach Yacht Club. Gar Wood will enter six of his latest creations, one of which he will drive personally. Mrs. William J. Conners will drive one of her well-known speed boats.

One of the featured events will be the race for the Green trophy for out-board motors. Another favorite contest will be the race of the boats i. the "Biscayne Baby" class.

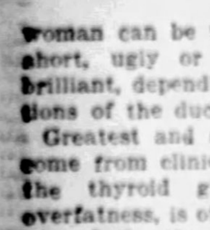
If Too Fat—Reduce!

By DR. THEODORE BECK



In the past ten years science has made great strides in learning the mysteries of human personality. In the study of the ductless glands, it is asserted that man or woman can be thin or fat, tall or short, ugly or beautiful, dull or brilliant, depending upon the secretions of the ductless glands.

Greatest and surest results have come from clinical experience with the thyroid gland. Obesity, or overfatness, is often due to the failure of the thyroid gland to function correctly and by adjusting this fault, through the use of a scientific formula, obese persons lose from 5 to 15 pounds in 30 days. Many report reductions of from 40 to 70 pounds and their joy knows no bounds.

For some years, I have been recommending 5-grain Arbolone Tablets to those who wished to reduce. The constantly increasing demand for these tablets, their approval by many physicians and chemists, and the many grateful and thankful letters I receive, indicates that reductions are attained without any harmful results to the users. On the contrary, many report improvement in health, complexions and feelings. By permission, I am publishing a few of the many letters received.

Reduced Weight Quickly—Easily

EVANSTON, ILLS., Mrs. Joseph A. P———, — Reba Place, writes: "Have taken one box of Arbolone Tablets and lost 10 pounds in one week, and have purchased another box, as I intend to take until I get back to normal, etc." (A later letter reads): "Before taking could not walk upstairs without being out of breath; could not walk any distance without becoming exhausted. I can now do both without being winded. Am down from 173 to 158 pounds in just two weeks. Thanking you, etc."

Reduced 12 Pounds in 30 Days

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, Helen McG———, — Sheridan Road, writes: "After having taken Arbolone Tablets thirty days, I wish to tell you how pleased I am over results. I have reduced twelve pounds, and have eaten just what I wanted. Will "After having taken Arbolone Tab-

Arbolone Reduced Satisfactorily

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Mrs. M. M———, — Claridge St., writes: "Have used Arbolone Tablets and have found them wonderful. Have taken 6 boxes and have lost considerable weight, and am still taking them. They take all the puffed feeling away and make you feel fine." (A later letter reads): "I have received great satisfaction from Arbolone Tablets and cannot praise them too highly, as I believe in giving credit where credit is due, etc."

Reduced 7 Pounds First Week

PENN YAN, N. Y., Mr. Chester M. H———, — Cornell St., writes: "Two weeks ago I purchased a box of 5-grain Arbolone Tablets, took them as per directions and the first week reduced seven pounds, and already feel much better. I weighed 193 and am sure that in a few weeks I will get back to my usual weight of 160, etc."

Arbolone Tablets are sold by all the May Drug Co. stores and all good druggists everywhere.

GAY DINNER PARTIES, BALLS, CROWD LONDON NIGHTS

Bouquets of Pearls And Jeweled Gloves Much in Vogue Now

By GERTRUDE LADY DECIES,
Universal Service Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Feb. 11.

THIS has been a week with an extraordinary number of receptions. The biggest of them were given by Lady Londonderry and Lady Beauchamp. The guests did not attend until 10:30 in the evening, so the big hotels were the scenes of many gay dinner parties. At the Savoy, Countess Howe, in white and wearing emeralds, was entertaining a large party of English and American friends. She is as popular in London as in New York, where she was Miss Flora Davis.

The Countess of Denbigh, formerly Miss Kathleen Emmmet, of New York, was dining with a large party at the Berkeley.

Invitations were eagerly sought for the dance which Viscountess Astor gave at St. James Square. The Duke and Duchess of York were present, the latter in a pastel blue gown with one of the new pearl flower bouquets on her right shoulder. These bouquets are being much worn by smart women and are entirely composed of a variety of colored pearls.

Lady Astor's house had been decorated throughout with flowering branches of mimosa. Daffodils, narcissus and spring violets were used in the reception rooms, with flame-colored tulips on the dining tables. A novel note was struck at the end of the dance, when every lady guest was asked to select a number of the flowers to take away with her.

Lady Ancester, one of the favorite Anglo-Americans in London, came to London for the opening of Parliament. Prior to this she had a big dinner party at Grimsthorpe Castle, Lincolnshire, to which half of the aristocracy of England had been invited. She received her guests at the top of a gilt marble staircase.

The Maharanee of Cooch Behar, recovered from her recent hunting accident, dined and danced. More than 500 guests were present and included Lady Blandford, Lord and Lady Woodhouse, Lord Feversham, Lord and Lady Brownlow and Lord and Lady Weymouth.

Mrs. John Lee Thomas, of Chicago, who is staying at the Berkeley, was dining in the restaurant when I looked in the other night. She had on a frock which was composed entirely of row upon row of crystal beads, giving a realistic effect of a waterfall. When she rose to dance she put on a pair of pastel tinted buff gloves, the kind which have replaced white kid in popular favor. Gloves are coming back for evening wear and almost any kind but white ones are chosen. In fact, one or two Anglo-Americans have started the vogue for jeweled gloves.

Princess Mary was seen at a function the other night wearing a pair of diamante mittens, and several women who do not want to hide slender, expensively manicured fingers are now following her example.

Albert C. Bostwick, of New York, created a sensation at the fashionable Gatwick steeplechase this week when he appeared in jockey garb to ride his own horse, Strong One. Under his experienced hands Strong One won the race. Bostwick has been one of the most prominent Americans hunting at Melton Mowbray this season. He has taken over several horses from Ambrose Clark, of New York, who is also hunting in the Melton Mowbray district. Earl Beatty has been out with the hounds a good deal lately, but is soon leaving for Cannes to join his American wife on a cruise of the Mediterranean.

Valentine Party At Bridgeville

MEMBERS of the Woman's Club of Bridgeville entertained their husbands and friends at a valentine party in the club rooms Tuesday evening. Miss Ethel Tilley, of Bellevue, sang a group of songs accompanied by Mrs. Joseph Hopper; Elbert R. Moses, of Pittsburgh School of Speech, read, and Miss Eleanor Hunter sang, accompanied by Miss Almeta Bizel. The hostesses were the president, Mrs. Leonard W. Roach; Mrs. Edna G. McCloy, Mrs. Thomas P. Richey, Mrs. E. LeRoy Shepard, Mrs. Lawrence Bowman and Mrs. William P. Stuckert.

Crafton Parents To Celebrate

AT THE February meeting of the Third Ward Crafton Parent-Teacher Association to be held Thursday evening in the Linwood Avenue School, the National P. T. A.'s thirty-first anniversary and the Third Ward third anniversary will be celebrated.

The speaker will be Rev. H. M. Engleson, pastor of the Hawthorne Avenue Presbyterian Church, Crafton. The musical program will be by Mrs. Grace Glenco Martin, who will entertain with piano solos; H. Russel Truitt, mandolin, and Mrs. Grace R. Mackenzie and Ralph Stone, vocalists.

Books, Music at Forum Wednesday

MRS. C. C. EICHER will give a book review at the meeting of the Forum on Wednesday afternoon in the Congress of Clubs. A musical program will be provided by Mrs. Amelia Walkenshaw, Miss Dorothy Jeffrey and Dorothy Ann Jeffrey.

Discuss Talking Across Ocean

"BELL System and Transatlantic Telephony" will be the subject of the talk to be given by L. Howard Hall at the monthly business meeting of the Sheraden Parent-Teacher Association in the American Avenue School Tuesday evening. The talk will be followed by three motion pictures, "Voices Across the Sea," "The Big Little Fellow" and "From Peaches to Pig Iron." The musical program will be furnished by Miss Nellie Wolstencroft, soprano, with Miss Florence Baer, accompanist.

Sewickley Women To Hear Johnson

DR. ROSWELL H. JOHNSON'S lecture on "Changing Russia" will be delivered tomorrow before the Sewickley Valley Woman's Club. Dr. Johnson having changed his date with the club to comply with Miss Royden's engagement last week. Miss Royden's visit brought out quite the largest audience of the season, an audience that included a great many men, among them the ministers of the valley.

"Merchandise of Quality"

A well-organized business has a well-defined policy. In the public mind the policy of any store becomes a characteristic feature by which it comes into a class.

The "merchandise of quality" policy of McCreery has become a slogan well known to Pittsburgh. Our entire organization has, since its inception, functioned with this thought always in mind. In the selection of wares in the world's marts, every detail of workmanship has been closely watched and only those that are worthy of the McCreery name have been accepted by us for our clientele.

Only first quality merchandise is offered over our counters. This is a store where Pittsburgh has bought for twenty-four years and is still buying in confidence.

Engaged to Easterner

MISS HELYN LOUISE BARRY'S engagement to Roger Barron Clark, of Philadelphia, has been made known by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wesley Barry, of Hamilton road, Thornburg. Miss Barry was graduated from Wells College and Penn State College, and is a member of the Chi Omega fraternity. Mr. Clark was graduated from Penn State and is a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Benefit for Home Is Planned

THE Woman's Club of Crafton will hold a benefit bridge and cake sale in the Congress Clubhouse next Saturday afternoon. The proceeds of both bridge and bake sale will go towards the building of a new club home. The club has voted by an overwhelmingly majority that a club house be built and that a lot be purchased for that purpose as soon as selected, thus definitely launching a club house campaign. There is available a considerable building fund, started by Mrs. W. S. Guy some years ago.

Science Century Subject

DR. EDWIN E. SLOSSON, chemist, author, educator, editor and director of Science Service, Washington, is the speaker announced for tomorrow at the Twentieth Century Club. Dr. Slosson's subject is to be "Creative Chemistry." Science Service is the unique institution which was established for the dissemination of scientific information to the public.

It has no official connection with the government, but is under the control of the National Academy of Sciences, the National Research Council and the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Dr. Andre Morize paid his second visit of the season to the club last Monday and spoke on "Leaders in French Literature."

Rose Chapter to Meet on Thursday

ROSE CHAPTER No. 92, O. E. S., will give a card party Thursday afternoon and evening in the home of Mrs. E. L. Speer in St. Ives street, North Side. A cafeteria super will be served. The chapter is also to give a card party February 20 in its chapter room in the Moose Temple.

The Biggest Day in the Leap Year for Women

Senior Regent

MRS. EVA K. LLOYD is senior regent of Moose Heart Legion, Chapter No. 1, which will hold a benefit euchre party next Saturday afternoon in Gimbel's. Mrs. Cora D. Martin is general chairman.

Excess Fat Is Folly

Reduce as your friends did

Look about you—note how slenderness prevails. Excess fat is the exception now. You must realize that some great factor has helped to bring this change. That factor is embodied in Marmola prescription tablets. It is a substance which, in the body, turns food into fuel and energy rather than into fat. Marmola supplies it to those who have too little. Medical science discovered this factor over two decades ago. For over 20 years people have used it in Marmola and told others the results. Millions of boxes have been employed in fighting excess fat. Now almost everybody has slender friends who can tell what Marmola did. No abnormal exercise or diet is required, though moderation aids results. Simply take four tablets daily until weight comes down to normal. Then cease, unless you start to gain again. Try Marmola, in justice to yourself. Watch its results in new beauty, new health and vitality. You cannot afford to carry fat when natural reduction has become so easy. The complete formula is stated in every box, also the reasons for results, to banish any fear of harm. Order now, before you forget it, and you will always be glad that you read this.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. If your druggist is out, he will get them at once from his jobber.

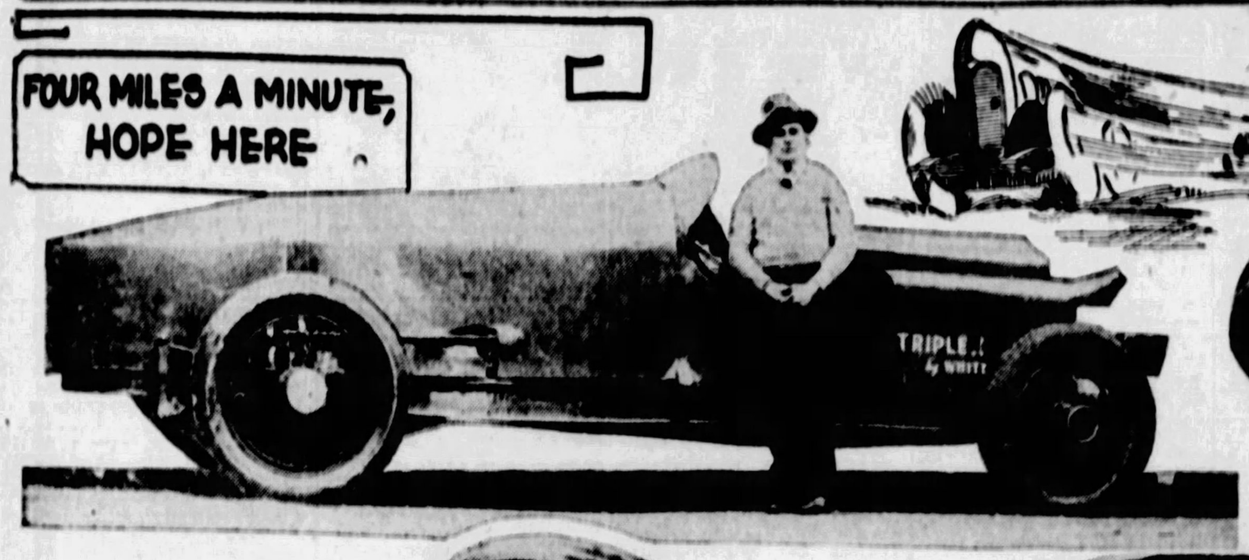
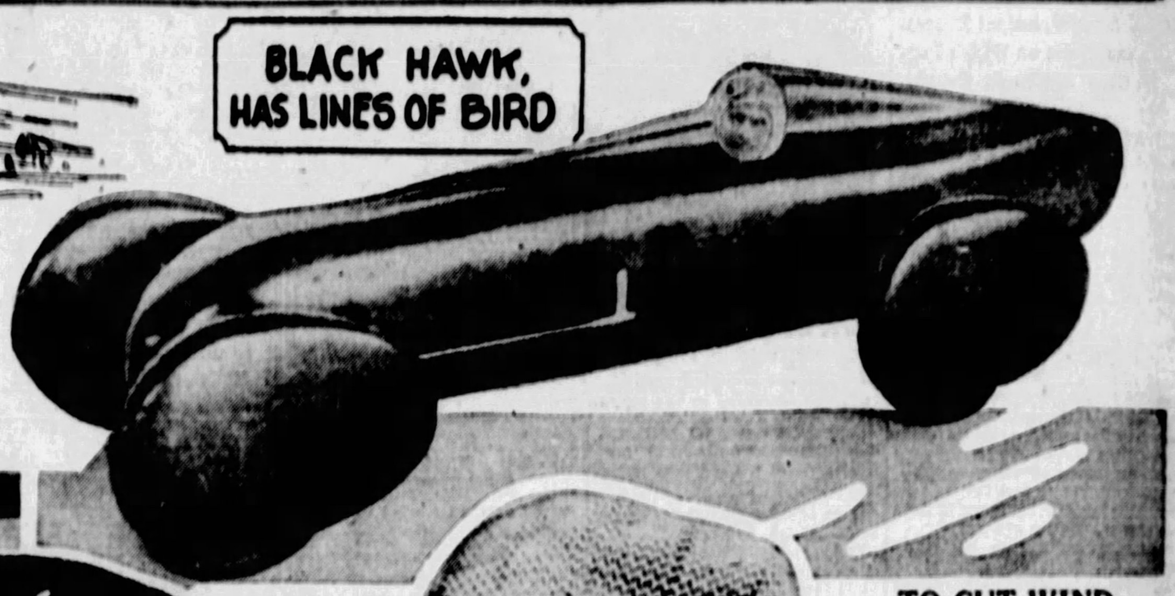
TWO NATIONS SEEK NEW AUTO SPEED MARKS

Many Cylindered Cars Built to Compete for World Speed Honors on Sands of Florida Beach

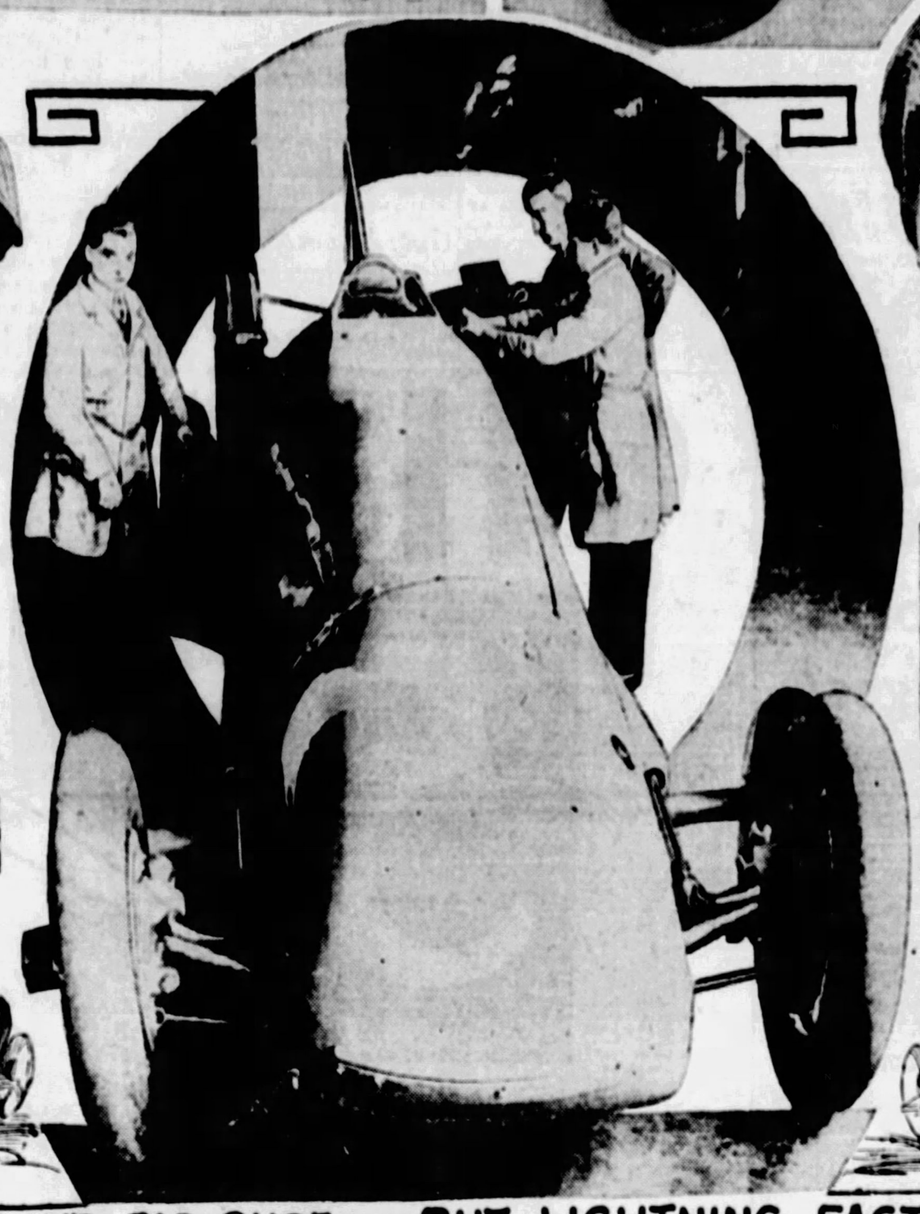




WAITING GUN — Triplex, the 36-cylindered car of J. M. White, of Philadelphia, will be one of three cars to participate in a world record race at Daytona.

FACES BATTLE

BRITAIN—Capt. Malcolm, who will defend the title now held by Maj. H. O. D. Seagrave.



IN DEFENSE—The Bluebeard, 12-cylinder Napier-engined racer, with which Britain will endeavor to retain the world speed record established by Maj. Seagrave in Florida a year ago. Non-explosive gasoline and oil tanks play an important part in the construction of this machine.

READY TO GO

AMERICAN— Frank Lockhart, famous on American race tracks, hopes to regain the title for the U. S.

TO CUT WIND — Black Hawk, the entry of Frank Lockhart, was designed in wind tunnels of the Army aero research bureaus. It is a 16-cylinder car.

FAST BRITISH CAR READY TO DEFEND TITLE

Many Remarkable Departures In Constructon Embodied In Powerful Machine.

DAYTONA, Fla., Feb. 11.—A number of remarkable departures in automobile construction are embodied in the new racing car in which Capt. Malcolm Campbell, famous racing driver, will defend the British speed record against American challengers here.

Capt. Campbell outlined the design of his new car in an interview with International News Service, when he expressed the belief that the machine would not fail in its attempt to uphold the speed record of 206 miles an hour set last year by Maj. Seagrave.

The principal characteristic of the new car is the fact that its oil and gasoline tanks are unburstable. Besides this, it has an entirely new type of gear box, allowing wider range and control and a detachable fin or rudder for direction and stability.

"I have chistened my new car the 'Bluebird,'" Capt. Campbell said. "She has cost me 10 times more than I anticipated, but she is worth it.

"I have the greatest confidence in her, but what she is likely to do in the way of stop-speed figures I cannot say, although I believe she is capable of tremendous speed.

"The detachable fin is very necessary," the driver declared, "to maintain direction and stability, for when a car is really going she begins to 'float' as it were, and it is difficult to keep your direction."

Capt. Campbell realizes that he does not face an easy task in meeting the best racing drivers of America.

"Maj. Seagrave, with his 203 miles an hour, has put the Americans on their mettle," he said. "America has some of the cleverest engineers in the world, with unlimited resources at their disposal."

TRIPLE MOTOR AUTO IN RACE

DAYTONA, Fla., Feb. 11.—Four or more miles a minute to regain the world speed record for America is the hope of J. M. White, of Philadelphia, for his 36-cylindered automobile, the Tripiex. This giant automobile will participate in the international straightaway speed trials during the week of February 15 to 23 at Ormond-Daytona Beach, in competition with Capt. Malcolm Campbell in his Bluebird, and Frank Lockhart in his Stutz Black Hawk Special.

The car is believed to be the most powerful ever built, boasting three motors. Two 12-cylinder airplane-type motors in the rear of the 175½ inch chassis and one in the front develop almost 3,000 horsepower.

A 40-gallon tank of water hung beneath the chassis will serve as the cooling system in place of the conventional radiator system. The water will be pumped through the motors direct from the tank.

The car will run a total of eight miles, according to the estimate of Mr. White, who says it will require four miles to get the car to top speed, one mile for the run and three miles to bring the car to a stop. A white sheet on the beach will serve as a guide to the cohrse.

Open Cars Style For Millionaires

Because closed models have become so common, manufacturers of expensive automobiles for the American millionaire class plan to sell their customers open cars in 1928.

HAMMER BLOWS FOR TIRE TESTS

Millions of hammer-like blows that slug at the rate of 450 times a minute are dealt to tires while being tested in the laboratory under Federal specifications, according to an explanation of tire testing by tire engineers. Records equivalent to eight and ten thousand miles are made on stock tires in these tests. Run against a drum on which there are three slugs, each set at a different angle, tires are subjected to blows at the rate of 900 times a mile or 9,000,000 times in 10,000 miles. Driven at the rate of 30 miles an hour, tires are run about 334 hours, and each two minutes 900 blows are struck by the slugs on the drum.

Records made during these tests are far in excess of Federal requirements, engineers claim. They compare the tests to running a car over a corduroy road on which steel slugs are placed at about each six feet. However, they point out that the machine tests are more severe as both the tire and the drum on which the slugs are placed are under momentum. Some part of the tire is constantly mauled during this gruelling test and flexing at the rate of 900 times a mile the carcass generates friction that is a severe strain.

The test drums resemble huge flywheels and are driven by electric motors. One slug is set at a certain angle and the other at a reverse angle. The third slug is straight across the wheel. Thus, engineers point out, the tire is subjected to three distinct kinds of blows.

'ANTOINETTE' IN MUSEUM

PARIS, Feb. 11.—"Antoinette" is going to spend the rest of her life in the Compeigne Museum.

"Antoinette" is the oldest automobile in France, built in 1895, still good, but slightly out of fashion. In 32 years the one-horse-power vehicle has traveled 175,000 miles at an average speed of five miles an hour.

When the Abbe Gavois of Allery brought home the car in the '90s—with the aid of a horse because he couldn't make it go—a laughing, jeering crowd followed him. A few years ago, during a Paris automobile show, he drove his antiquated car down the Champs Elysees with crowds cheering to him.

It is one of the few automobiles in the world that has been sold second-hand for more than it cost. The Automobile Club of Picardy bought "Antoinette" to put in the automobile section of the Compiegne Museum.

RIMES of the ROAD by Dudley Glass

ANN'S FOLLY

I BOUGHT a motor car last year
With great deliberation.
I gave each nut and bolt and gear
A close examination.
I studied stroke and bore and brake;
I drove it for a test,
And after weeks I chose the make
My study proved was best.

My wife went down to Auto Row
And past show windows wandered,
And after half-an-hour or so
Her long-saved cash she squandered.
She chose a blue coach, make unknown,
In preference to the brown
Because, she said, 'twas just the tone
To match her latest gown!

And when she showed her car with pride
I nearly choked with laughter.
I jeered at her until she cried—
But now, 'tis twelve months after.
And my car's proved a hopeless botch;
While what I called "Ann's Folly"
Is running smoothly as a watch
And I ride on the trolley!

"Say," inquired the taxicab driver on the strange road, "don't I take the next turn

"I should say not!" said the voice from the back seat. "I'm engaged to this young lady!"

"Tom has a terrible temper. He says he simply sees red."

"Well, when he does that he'd better wait for it to turn green, or he'll get into trouble."

"I'd trade my old car for a new," Said our old friend Aladdin.
"What would you say is best to do?"
"Why, put a little ad in!"

POLICE ADAPT RADIO TO CARS

Equipping police cars with radio receiving sets so as to be in constant communication with headquarters is the latest step in raped crime detection and prevention. This move has been made by August Vollmer, chief of the Berkeley police department.

This method introduced by Chief Vollmer is the modern police answer to the swiftness with which present-day criminals operate. The broadcasting station, which sends out a low length wave, has been installed at police headquarters and each police car is equipped with a receiving set to catch the bulletins and orders from headquarters. In addition to the radio system, Berkeley has installed a light and siren call system at intersections throughout the city to summon patrolmen on foot.

KEEPING ICE OFF SHIELD

One of the annoyances of driving a closed car in winter is the steam that sometimes collects on the inside of the windshield and windows. If the day is very cold, this steam soon forms a dangerous curtain of frost. While the condensation of steam can be prevented by opening a window and lowering the inside temperature, this has decided disadvantages when the temperature hovers around zero.

Many car owners report success in keeping their glass free from steam and frost by rubbing it with a glycerine-moistened cloth. Others polish the glass with newspaper. The chemicals in printer's ink seem to give the glass an extra smooth finish. Plug tobacco rubbed over the glass is effective to a certain degree. Some car owners recommend a little salt on a moistened cloth. The salt treatment is especially good to remove ice and frost that have already formed on the glass, but the protective film it leaves will not last nearly as long as the glycerine film.

Obey to Letter All Traffic Laws

Drivers should be thoroughly instructed in all right of way regulations for your city. Strict obedience to traffic officers and lights is absolutely necessary in congested areas.

Parking Ban Speeds Traffic in Chicago

Traffic speed in the downtown district of Chicago has increased five miles an hour as the result of "no parking" regulation.

BLACK HAWK U. S. HOPE TO REGAIN HONOR

Lockhart's Preparations for Speed Record Aided by U. S. Air Service Bureaus.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 11.—In a sense a contest between the air ministry of Great Britain and the air service of the United States Army! Friendly, of course, but none the less a contest.

That is what will be happening down on the famous sands of Daytona Beach, Fla., the week of February 15-23 when Frank Lockhart, with his supersped car, a Stutz Black Hawk Special, and Malcolm Campbell of London, Eng., with his Bluebird, both attempt to set a new world's automobile speed record in excess of the 203.79 miles an hour now held by Maj. H. O. D. Seagrave in his 1,000 horsepower British Sunbeam. J. M. White, of Philadelphia, with his Triplex, also will attempt to exceed Maj. Seagrave's record.

But with the issue joined thus there still will be a distinction. Campbell is reported to have received the support of the British Air Ministry in conditioning his huge 12-cylinder aviation engine of 1,461 cubic inches displacement. Lockhart went to the Army Air Service of his country for aid, but along body rather than engine lines. With his power plant of only 183 cubic inches, compressed into 16 tiny cylinders, the young racing star of American speedways had to have scientific body lines to achieve his ends.

The Army Air Service of McCook and Wright fields, Dayton, O., through the courtesy of W. E. Gillmore, brigadier-general, air corps, offered to assist Lockhart in any way possible. The general placed at Lockhart's service the wind tunnel experts and equipment of the two air fields.

The wind tunnel experts built an 18-inch model on an accurate scale. They put it through the same rigid tests they do airplane models. It was tested for stability and head resistance, which determines the speed. It was tested to determine how much the front end of the car would lift under speed, how the rear would act at more than 200 miles an hour.

The battle will be one between the 750 delivered horsepower of the Campbell Bluebird; the 385 to 400 delivered horsepower of the Lockhart motor, and the 3,000-horsepower of White's car.

PENNSYLVANIA ROAD FUNDS

There has been at total of $34,674,516 apportioned for building federal-aid highways in Pennsylvania, of which there remained $6,066,283.78 unexpended on June 30, 1927, according to Paul C. Wolff, secretary of the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh.

The total amount appropriated by Congress for the federal-aid projects throughout the country since 1921 has reached the total of $744,500,000, which is only slightly more than the total amount of taxes paid by motorists during the last year.

"Of the total appropriations," declared Mr. Wolff, "$28,608,632.22 has been expended in Pennsylvania and $550,671,548.76 was spent throughout the country. The present fiscal year began with a balance of $165,828,451.24 to continue the work."

Two More New Motor Cars—Production Below Demand

By RAY PRIEST

PLANE-AUTO CONTEST PLAN

DETROIT, Feb. 11.—There are still some new cars to come. Two of the largest and oldest manufacturers are about to go into production with cars that early experimental work indicate will be exceptionally good values in their price classes.

One company has a new six cylinder motor in its car and the other has a new eight cylinder motor for power.

Many national figures in the automobile and airplane world are behind a new sort of reliability race, plans for which are being formulated here. This will be a reliability tour between one of the finer automobiles built today and a passenger carrying plane.

Plans developed so far call for the contestants to race with heavy loads, either of passengers or freight, to start in Detroit, and end here. Upon official recognition coming from Washington the entire project will be announced.

Those behind the contest believe that it will demonstrate the practicability of both the plane and the automobile for transportation purposes between our larger cities.

Dealer demand for cars has caused every automobile manufacturer in this territory and several in other cities of the country to get considerably behind filing orders, previous year's programs called for small production schedules during January, enough to satisfy dealer demands for display purposes and then increases in February to care for sales that came at automobile shows.

The manufacturers found such an early demand this year that they stepped up production in January, as far as facilities would permit, and then started into peak production on February 1. Peak production usually was reached in past years about March 1.

Willys-Overland has started an expansion program at Toledo to get itself in shape to catch up with orders now on hand. It calls for a $750,000 building, four stories in height, 860 feet long and 105 feet wide. Rapid overhauling of warehouse space for production is almost completed and storing of materials has been started in all the available mercantile warehouses at Toledo.

Chevrolet attempted to care for a portion of its export business in January, but in Febrary promises to build 100,000 cars for American dealers. Even this total will be short of the number required by this company's dealers.

Ford is working more than 92,000 men in Detroit alone and has the assembly plants in Kearny, N. J.; Louisville, Ky., and San Francisco running, besides the one in this city. Production will pass the 1,200 daily mark some time during the coming week, it was said.

MANY PLANTS AT HIGH PEAK

The Star Four plants at Lansing, Mich., and San Francisco are buzzing with activity.

Nash plants in Kenosha, Racine and Milwaukee have reached their capacity, it was said at Kenosha. The cut in Nash prices produced a tremendous stimulus to business.

Motorists Urge Congress Speed Up Road Building

A. A. A. TELLS OF NEED FOR MORE AVENUES

Brief Cites Principal Recommendations on Which Legislative Action Is Sought.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Appearing before the roads committee of the House of Representatives, spokesmen for the American Automobile Association and its 258 affiliated motor clubs presented an extensive program for the acceleration and expansion of highway construction projects throughout the United States.

The A. A. A. presentation in behalf of more motoring mileage was opened by Ernest N. Smith, general manager of the national motoring body, who told the House roads committee that our car builders and car owners are crowding our highway builders and that the need for more and better highways is more urgent today than ever before.

As a preliminary to his statement, Mr. Smith called the attention of the committee to the current agitation in favor of the construction of toll highways and served notice that "the American Automobile Association, while favoring express highways, is absolutely opposed to the granting of congressional sanction for the construction of toll highways under any and all circumstances, and to the granting of toll bridge franchises, unless express provision is made for their ultimate recapture to free public use."

Mr. Smith submitted to the committee an extensive brief under the signature of Thomas P. Henry, president of the A. A. A., in which were outlined the principal recommendations on which action at this session of Congress was declared to be "absolutely imperative."

The recommendations were grouped under the following three main heads:

First—Continuation of federal aid for the fiscal years 1930 and 1931 on an undiminished scale, that is, at the rate of $75,000,000 a year as the very minimum necessary to meet national needs.

Second—An increase from $7,500,000 to $12,500,000 in the annual appropriation for the construction of forest roads and trails.

Third—Congressional approval of the use of 100 per cent of federal aid funds on specially important projects in the interstate systems of 11 public land states in the West and Far West.

For That Shopping Trip

OR SPORTS USE—This smart Victoria, seating four, is mounted on the Studebaker Dictator chassis. Space for luggage is provided in the rear deck in addition to a compartment for parcels behind the driver's seat. It is an ideal car for sports use or shopping, and is one of the featured cars of the Studebaker Sales Company.

Forest Roads Cost $7,000,000 in 1927

A total of 1,370 miles of forest roads was constructed in and adjacent to the national forests of the United States during the last fiscal year. The amount expended on all forest road construction during the year was $7,713,535, of which $6,787,656 was from Federal funds and the remainder, $925,879, from local cooperative, state and county funds.

100 Per Cent Fall In Automobile Taxes

Automobiles and motorcycles of the United States yielded the government $66,427,851 in 3 per cent tax for the year 1927, as compared with the $138,155,134 return on the 5 per cent tax for 1926.

BAUER SAILS FOR HAVANA

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—George P. Bauer, representing the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, sailed on the S. S. Tola, today to attend the second Cuban Highway Congress, which is to be held in Havana, February 22-23.

President Gerardo Machado of Cuba is honorary president of the Congress which is to be held under the joint auspices of the Automobile Club of Cuba and the Cuban Automobile Dealers' Association. The chairman of the Congress is Carlos Miguel de Cespedes, Minister of Public Works.

NEW PEERLESS ORDERS HEAVY

Information from the Peerless factory in Cleveland indicates that the company has started on another record-breaking year. Actual shipments of cars for the last month are greater than those of any January in the experience of the Peerless Motor Car Corporation, with a single exception. The exception was in 1926, the peak year in Peerless history, when production on all models was in full swing.

This year, the new Six-91 was first introduced at the New York automobile show, and production was started early in January, taking some time to gather momentum, and the resultant slight decrease in shipments places January, 1928, just slightly below January, 1926.

Price reductions ranging from $50 to $1,150 on the Six-60, Six-80, and Eight-69, as announced January 10, this year, also were partly responsible for the flood of orders which poured in during the month.

The Peerless distributing organization, larger now than ever before, is displaying great enthusiasm on the year's outlook, and in many cases dealers are establishing new high sales records for themselves.

Three Billions Spent For Autos in 1927

Of the 3,666,000 passenger automobiles produced in the United States last year, the average retail price of the cars was $953.

Guard Looseness In Steering Parts

Development of looseness in the steering may be found due to wear in the king pin and its correlative units.

Head New Company

PRESIDENT—C. A. Rehtmeyer heads C. A. Rehtmeyer, Inc., which succeeds the Englert-Rehtmeyer Company as distributor here for Oakland and Pontiac cars.

TREASURER—M. P. Garey has been named treasurer of C. A. Rehtmeyer, Inc. Mr. Garey is one of the best known motor car executives in the Pittsburgh district.

Ride "Mooching" Made Unlawful

Ride "mooching" is recognized and regulated by San Francisco's new traffic ordinance. The governing section provides it shall be unlawful for any person to stand in a roadway for the purpose of, or while, soliciting a ride from the operator of any private vehicle.

Sees Possibility Of U. S. Licensing

According to Charles U. Becker, Secretary of State of Missouri, Government licensing of automobiles will be forced unless various States quit compelling residents of other States to purchase their licenses when they come into these States.

THREE TRUCK DUTY GROUPS

Your truck comes within one of three great divisions of duty required; and it will be a profitable truck for you only if its makers had the foresight and resources to build it accurately for that specific division. This sums up the modern development of commercial transportation, according to W. M. Kelley, manager of the local branch General Motors Truck Company.

To have practical value, Mr. Kelley declared, any classification of trucks must be based upon the duty for which the equipment is to be used.

"There are these three fields of truck requirements: light duty, medium duty, and heavy duty," he explained. "In the light duty field, as the term implies, loads will not be heavy. Speed, with year in, year out reliability, are the prime requisites.

"In the medium duty range similar speed and reliability are demanded, with the added ability to carry relatively greater loads.

"For heavy duty, speed is, of course, less imperative. But greater reserves of power must be there, and you must have trucks with tremendous strength built into every part. And there must be a range of speeds, too, for highway and street travel, in addition to the pulling range."

$416,757 to See Parks of Nation

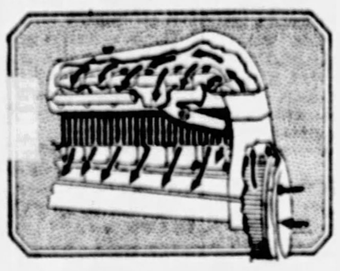
Motorists paid $416,757 in tolls to visit the national parks during the 1927 season, and a total of 557,079 private cars entered the parks during this period. Commenting on the part motordom is playing in aiding the development of the nation's scenic and recreational resources, the American Automobile Association says that it demonstrates the need for improved highways in the national parks.

Air-cooling—

How does it work? What are the advantages?

AIRMAN SERIES

AVIATION — with the whole world of engineering to choose from — has virtually standardized on the air-cooled motor. Backing this decision lay expert knowledge of engines and long years of experience. That the air-cooled motor was adopted is of tremendous significance to every motorist. Air-cooling was pioneered and perfected for the world — through the medium of the Franklin automobile.



Simplicity Itself

In the air-cooled motor, air is forced in by the Sirocco fan and carried in enormous volume over the tops of the cylinders—down through the vertical cooling flanges which surround each cylinder, with greater amounts allotted to points of greater heat. The whole motor is cooled by an ever-changing supply of air—once the air has passed over the cylinders it is carried away and instantly replaced by fresh air. (There is no recooling and recirculating, as in water-cooled cars.)

Water-cooled cars are forced to use radiators to bring the hot water into contact with the air so it can be cooled and used again — air-cooling means the whole motor is cooled directly by an endless supply of fresh air.

Greater Efficiency

The elimination of more than one hundred parts—parts that frequently go wrong and cause expensive delays — permits a saving in weight that is reflected in lower gasoline, oil and tire consumption. The air-cooled motor is independent of extremes in weather conditions—you go wherever you will, all year round, with no thought of danger of freezing or overheating.

The fact that a Franklin Owner's next car is so generally another air-cooled Franklin constitutes the most impressive endorsement that can be accorded an automotive principle.

Only in a Franklin do you find so complete an assembly of the factors which make motoring a genuine pleasure. We will be pleased to arrange a thorough demonstration for you. Have one this week!

U. S. Motorist Leads in Spending for Service to Car

PUBLIC LEARNS PROPER CARE IS ESSENTIAL

Now Spend 60 Cents of Car Dollar for Maintenance, Analysis Shows.

The American motorist now leads the world in spending money for service on his car. Out of each dollar spent on automobiles in the United States this year, at least 60 cents will go for maintenance, supplies, labor and service parts. The remaining 40 cents will represent car sales.

These figures have just been announced by Commissioner William M. Webster of the Automotive Equipment Association, following a conference with leaders in the automobile industry. The figures are based on an analysis of automobile trade conditions in every section of the country and reports of advance orders for 1928, just completed by members of the Automotive Equipment Association, comprising more than 600 leading manufacturers and jobbers of automotive equipment in the United States and Canada.

"The demand of the American motor car owner for service and maintenance on his vehicle has grown during each of the last 10 years in almost geometric ratio to the increases in automobile registrations," Commissioner Webster said. "Where the American motorist of 1915 spent 20 cents of his car dollar for service, he spent 57 cents in 1927."

"The fact that motor car manufacturers today are building more mileage and transportation into their automobiles and making them speedier and sturdier than ever before, is the real secret of the increasing demand for service, because the public are buying more cars than ever before and are rapidly learning that an automobile is a piece of transportation machinery which must be taken good care of, if it is to be operated safely, comfortably and economically.

"On the basis of the number of cars that will be manufactured, sold and registered in the United States this year, it is ultra-conservative to say that at least 60 cents of every automobile dollar spent by the American motorist in 1928 will be for maintenance and service. American registration of motor vehicles will easily pass 25,000,000 by next December. This means that America's automobile bill for 1928 will top by many millions the already stupendous $15,000,000,000 total of 1927, and that $9,000,000,000 of this will cheerfully be paid by the American motorist to keep his car running and in good condition on the road."

METROPOLITAN NEW CHANDLER

"One of Chandler's newest presentations on the big six chassis, and one which is destined to win interest on the part of the motoring public, is Chandler's new Metropolitan sedan," states C. H. Kenney, Pittsburgh Motor Corporation, Chandler distributor.

McGraw's Giants To 'Go Up in Air' To Ball Games

JOHN J. M'GRAW, manager and part owner of the New York Giants, is waiting only on the aeronautical industry to produce a "four or more motored plane" before he takes his ballplayers out of upper berths and makes them keep baseball schedules by airplane.

Recently, at the end of a hop from Key West to Havana, which he has made a number of times by plane, he said: "It is the safest method there is of travel. I have been up 40 or 50 times. I shall be perfectly willing to transport my team by airplane as soon as they perfect ships with four or more motors. I don't have so much confidence in single-motored planes."

'CHROM' PLATE ON STUDEBAKER

Chromium plating is used for all exterior "bright metal" parts on Studebaker cars. As a result of the use of this new metal Studebaker owners are assured of bumpers, headlights, radiator shells and other plated parts which are free from rust or tarnish, and which in addition are virtually wearproof, say officials of the Studebaker Sales Company.

Chromium is even brighter than nickel when polished, and is harder than the hardest tool steel. It is rustproof, impervious to salt and all but two acids, and resists heat up to 2,000 degrees. It is practically unscratchable and so hard that even a thin film of it on other metal will cut glass. Finally it can be plated on almost any other metal, giving a coat of complete and lasting protection.

While this last quality would make it possible for Studebaker to apply chromium direct to the polished metal, thus taking a short cut to reduce production costs, the corporation's research engineers found that the most satisfactory results were obtained when the surface to be plated was first polished, then copper plated, then nickel plated, and after a final polish, given its lasting coat of chromium.

Brighter than nickel when first applied, chromium has the added advantage of being extremely easy to keep bright. Due to the fact that it will not tarnish or rust, a few strokes with a soft cloth is sufficient to restore the original luster to headlamps and radiator shell after they have become dulled by rain or exposure. And regardless of how much the chromium coating is polished, it does not wear off like a similar thin coating of nickel plating.

Drivers Required To Retain Control

Drivers must be required to follow other vehicles at such distances and speeds as will enable them to stop in emergencies without hitting the vehicles ahead.

ATTRACTIVE LINES—The Marmon 78 roadster is a car that brings to mind the country club, seashore and mountain resorts. It embodies the modern lines in automobile styles and hints of a powerful motor beneath the appealing hood. It is one of the displays of the Marmon Company of Pittsburgh.

CAR FOR TWO LATEST HUPP

A cabriolet for two, designed for the less conservative motor car owner, is announced as an addition to the list of body styles for the new Hupmobile Six of the Century. It comes with or without the rumble seat.

Fitted with factory-installed custom equipment, such as cowl lights, trunk rack, wire or disc wheels in front fenders, its racy effect is enhanced by the one-piece, full-crowned fenders, radiator shell design and cap, military visor and forward-tilting windshield, the slight elongation of window spaces, landau bows and the graceful sloping of body lines at the rear and over the gasoline tank.

A remarkable color effect has been produced in this car. Main body color is Hawthorne green with Zanzibar green for the window reveals and wheels, black windshield frame and military visor, combined with stripings in Old Ivory. The rear curtain may, of course, be removed. Custom equipment matches that of the car's colorings in every detail, including wheels whether wood, disc or wire. Even the bumpers and tire covers are designed to match remainder of the car's ensemble.

Owners Warned To Guard Car Parts

Urging that the best engineering practices and safety demand that motor cars be unaltered in vital stress points, the Pittsburgh Automobile Dealers' Association, which is one of the largest and most representative bodies of distributors and dealers in the country, has issued a statement to motorists.

"The motor car is the product of the greatest industry in the world today and represents the most skilled engineering," said W. N. Owings, secretary of the Pittsburgh Automobile Dealers' Association. "Every facility for advancement is employed. Rigid tests are conducted through months under most expert supervision. When a motor car is delivered to the purchaser, it is the embodiment of correctness in every detail.

SPECIAL CARE

"Special care is given the stress points to which road shocks are transmitted. This applies particularly to the steering gear, the alignment and camber of the wheels. Each angle is worked out to maintain strength and balance.

"Because tires wear from other causes—principally under-inflation—there has been an increasing practice urged upon motorists to endeavor to correct tire wear by bending axles. This, motor car engineers point out, is not only wrong, but dangerous.

"The balance of the front end of the car is thrown out by any alteration of the axle or steering gear. This tends to make the car unmanageable. With the tendency of higher speed in the modern motor car and the universal adoption of four-wheel brakes, the front axle and steering gear have received more attention in design and manufacture than any other part of the car. As a matter of fact, practically every manufacturer has redesigned the front axle and steering mechanism to insure greater safety under all driving conditions.

DESTROYS VALUE

"To tamper with this design and balance is, obviously, to destroy all of the engineering advancement that has been built into the cars.

"Moreover, the practice of bending axles is deemed so dangerous by some of the manufacturers that they immediately remove the guarantee from any car so treated. Engineers declare that there have been instances of failure in these vital parts that have been tampered with, owing to unintended stresses being thrown upon them.

"When it is remembered that motor car engineers build to one-thousandth of an inch and less, it is ridiculous to believe that performance could be bettered by methods far removed from factory equipment and experience."

Modern Cars Designed for "Low, Long, Lean" Lines

GOOD ROADS AID BUILDERS OBTAIN STYLE

Height of Auto Judged From Roof to Ground—Double Drop Frame to Get Result.

By AN AUTOMOTIVE ENGINEER

One of the main points of difference between the old cars and the new is the fact that the new cars are so much lower. There is nothing that appeals to the human eye more than "low," long lean" lines when automobiles or boats are concerned. There is something about this type of vehicle or craft that suggests the sleek rakishness that everyone seems to desire.

We have known this for a long time, but it has not been so easy to incorporate these ideas into an automobile body and chassis and come out with a practical car. It is easy if one does not care for such matters as seating comfort, or head room or ground clearance. Even spring suspension is affected.

The height of the car is judged from the exterior rather than from the interior. Therefore it is the height of the roof above the ground that counts. If it were possible to leave everything else the same and cut down the height of the roof it would be easy. To do that, however, would seriously affect the shape of the hats or even the heads of the occupants. Therefore it is necessary to bring the floor down more closely to the ground.

WHEELS SMALLER

On the older models the bodies were mounted considerably above the chassis, but designers soon found that the bodies could be mounted directly on the sills. This means a saving of from ½ inch to 1 inch. Lowering the seats enabled the tops to be brought down lower although it caused the passengers to sit with their legs stretched out ahead a little more. In most instances, however, this was more comfortable than the old-fashioned upright seats.

Probably the next step in the lowering of the cars has been in the adoption of smaller wheels. Balloon tires came along with this. We now find wheels that are 20 inches in diameter instead of 26 inches. At one time the 24x4-inch tire was the most popular size. This meant that the wheel diameter was 26 inches. Today many makers are turning to the 18-inch wheel to get the cars down more.

SAVE AN INCH

It is, of course, necessary that the frame clear the rear axle by enough margin to permit of plenty of range of action for the springs. In order to keep the car low and at the same time provide for the spring action there is a greater use of the drop frame than ever. This type of frame is a little more expensive to make because of the necessity of accurately bending it about a mould. This has to be done while the frames are heated almost to white heat. The drop in a frame is the kick up in the rear that carries it back over the rear axle. Some frames have a double drop in order to have plenty of room over the rear axle to allow the spring to function and at the same time keep the car low.

In the old-time cars there used to be plenty of room under the rear seat for tools, tire chains and what not. Today with the drop frame construction the back of the body is so close to the frame that generally there is no room at all beneath the rear seat. The bottom of the body has to be kept away from the rear axle so there will be no "bumping" as the car goes over road depressions.

Another factor which has contributed in some degree towards making cars lower is the good roads. Because of the improvement of roads it is no longer necessary to have as much ground clearance as it used to be. While there may be some parts of the country where a trip is occasionally made over roads that are rutted so deeply that a car needs excessive clearance to get over them, these are the exception rather than the rule. An inch has been saved by some of the makers in this way.

Add together the height saved by lower seats, reduced clearance, smaller wheels, slightly reduced head room, bodies closer to the frame and the difference in appearance between the new cars and the old is very easily accounted for. Beyond all this there is the benefit derived from the superior lines of the new body styles. This increases the effect of lowness and also makes the car appear longer.

COURT UPHOLDS CAR SEIZURES

The right of the United States government to seize and libel an automobile used in illegal liquor transportation has again been upheld by a United States Circuit Court. In the case of Champlain Motors Company, Buick dealer in Vermont, the court held that the right of the government was superior to that of the dealer who holds a conditional bill of sale on the car and who was innocent of any wrong-doing.

Stealing a Drive On Berlin Streets

Research on foreign soil proves to be a difficult task for the American engineer, especially one who must drive the foreign cars to find those things he seeks, writes Tore Franzen, chief engineer of the spring division of the Detroit Steel Products Company.

Franzen's first stop on a three months' tour of Europe was Germany.

"The thing I came here for, as you know, was to drive automobiles," Franzen wrote, "but in order to do that I must be a law breaker. It takes exactly four weeks to get a German driver's license, besides it costs 400 marks. (Fine country this would be for Drive-Yourselves.) It is necessary for me to steal an occasional drive when in company with a licensed driver. My only drive so far to any distance was from Berlin to Zittau and back, altogether about 600 kilometers.

RELATIVELY WIDE ROADS

"The roads are really good looking and relatively w[illegible] (about 22 feet). They are old, judging by the trees, that in some places must be centuries old. The pavement is relatively hard. What we call the 'washboard' effect is somewhat more pronounced on these roads and the good old car is mighty difficult to hold when it goes above 60 miles an hour.

"The spirit shown in American plants of giving a foreign visitor everything he wants and on top of it a good dinner is not particularly evident here.

"The automobile traffic in Berlin is perhaps as much similar to that of New York as it is possible to find in Europe anywhere. The number of private cars here as in New York are extremely limited. The greatest traffic on the streets is made up of taxis and cabs of all descriptions ranging from the small Citroen to the rather pretentious Mercedes. Then of course there are many buses and trucks.

FAST FIRE FIGHTERS

"The fire department here is gasoline driven, but how! The other evening I was out driving when all of a sudden we heard a sound similar to that of a couple of competing rag pickers (two screeching horns set at different pitches). Just to find out how fast they could go, we followed. They actually reached the terrific speed of 17 miles an hour. They were going to a place where there had been a very nasty explosion in which two men were killed.

"The streets are deserted about 9:30 in the evening. At 10 o'clock you could shoot a machine gun down any thoroughfare and not hit a person."

Truck Shippers Protest Report of I. C. C. Examiner

LEAGUE ASKS 90 DAYS FOR EXCEPTIONS

Petition Says No Public Emergency Demands Action; Delay Would Serve All.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Stating that there is no evidence of demand on the part of the shipping public for the regulation of motor trucks in interstate commerce, the National Industrial Traffic League filed a petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, stating that the league will require not less than 90 days' time for this national body to act and submit exceptions to the I. C. C. examiner's tentative report.

The league includes in its membership traffic managers of industries and of chambers of commerce throughout the country.

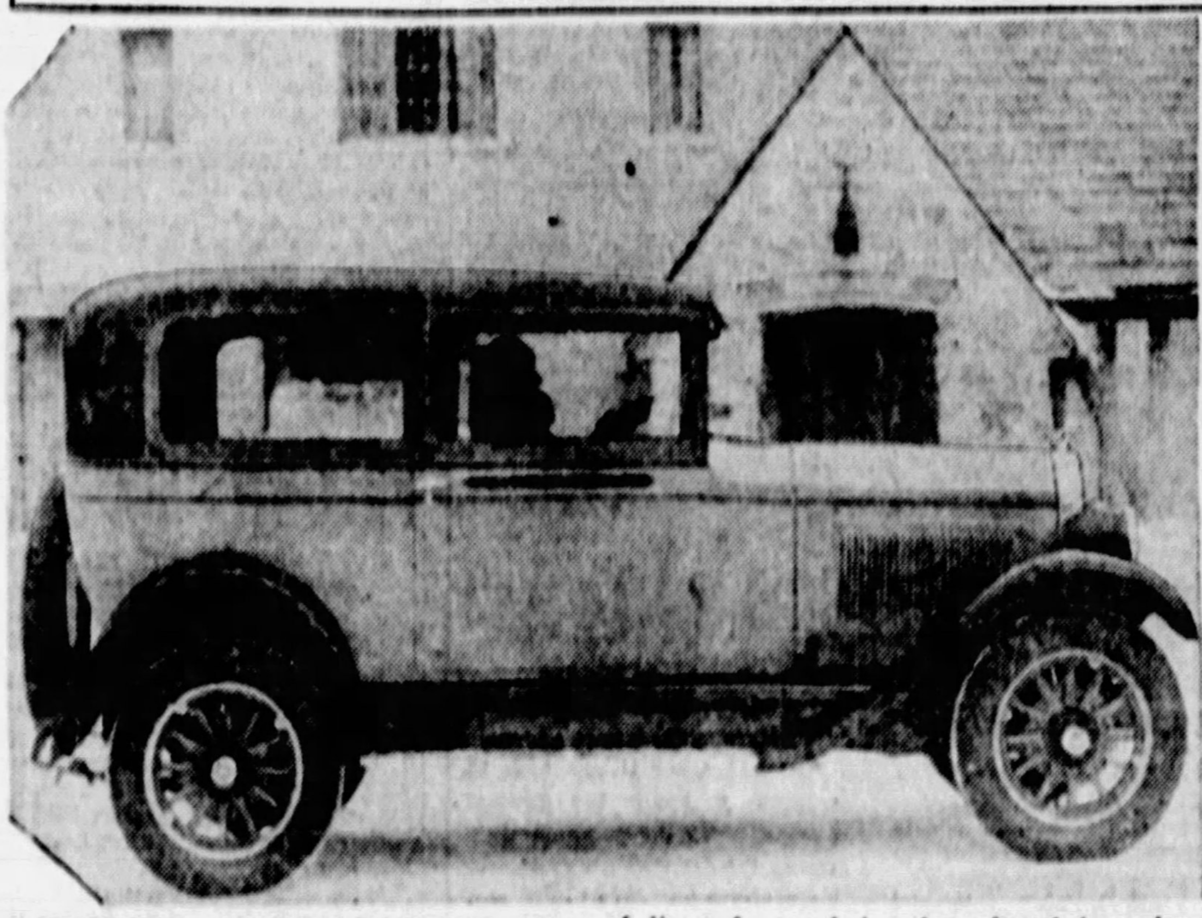
The petition has reference to the tentative report of Examiner Flynn following investigation of interstate traffic on highways.

Pointing to the conclusion of the league at its annual meeting, November 17, 1926, after a study of the evidence submitted in the countrywide hearings of the commission, "that there is no visible demand upon the part of the shipping public for the regulation of motor trucks engaged in interstate commerce," the petition of the league's committee states that there is no immediate public emergency demanding action. It asks for an extension of not less than 90 days' time for the filing of exceptions to the proposed report of Examiner Flynn.

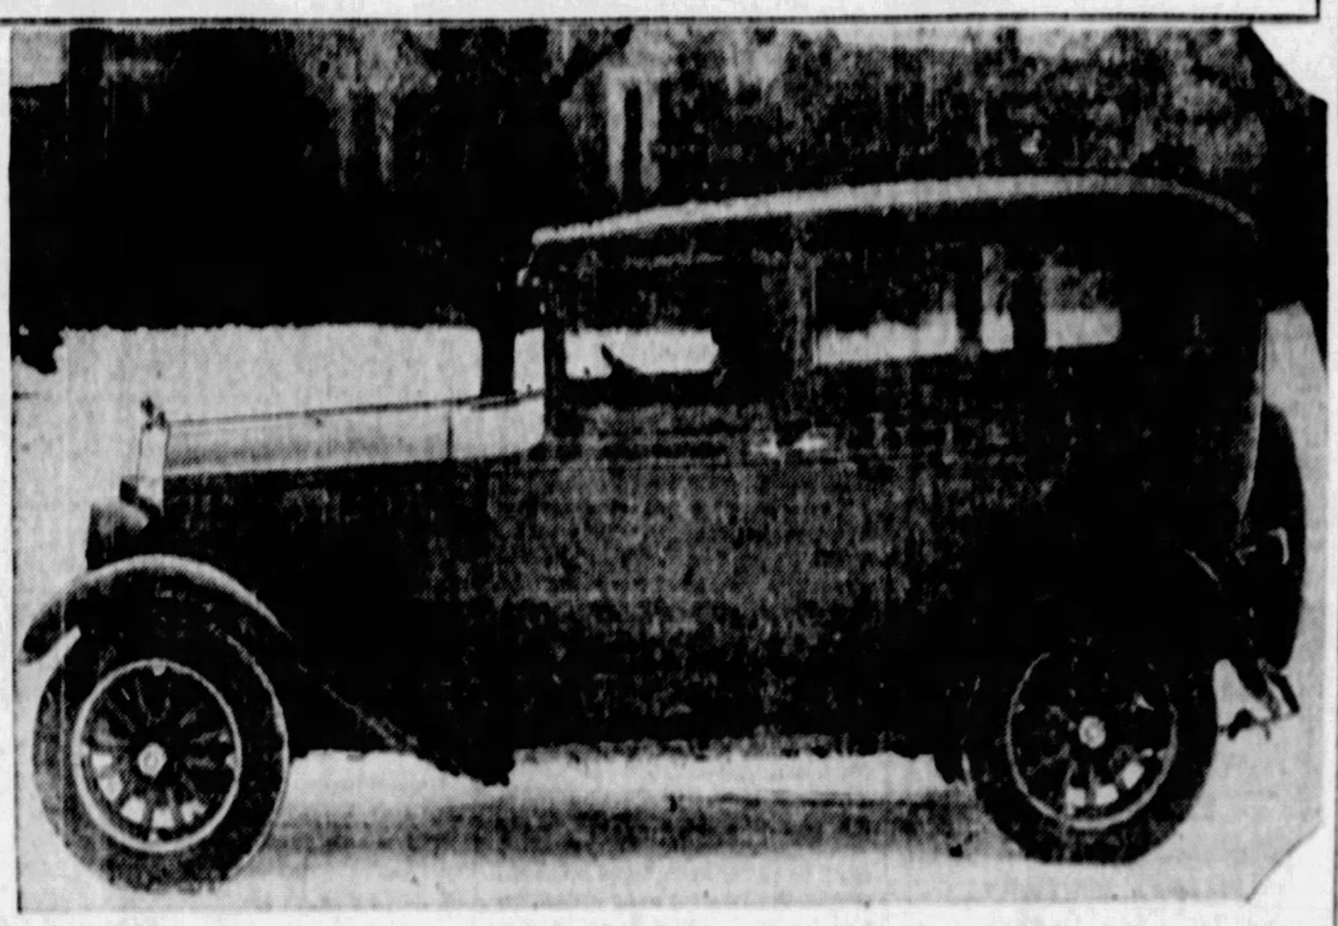
This report was made public on January 17, following hearings by the commission in principal cities throughout the country during the last half of 1926. The report of the examiner is tentative only, and in its petition the league points to the fact that the voluminous report with 30 specific conclusions dealing with many angles of highway traffic cannot be given proper consideration by this national body within that time.

"Public interest would be best served," says the petition, "by affording to the public an ample length of time to reach its conclusions as to any contemplated recommendations on the part of the commission."

Newcomers in Motor World Products of Veteran Auto Builder



COACH—The Willys-Knight Standard Six five-passenger coach, one of the new line of cars being introduced here by the Rea-Seagert Company, distributors for Willys-Overland cars.



SEDAN—Another model of the latest line of cars by the veteran automobile builder, John N. Willys. These cars are the lowest priced Knight engined cars ever offered by the Overland group.

Willys-Knight Adds Third Line of Cars

TOLEDO, O., Feb. 11.—Broadening the field for Knight-engined cars by the introduction of an entirely new, popular priced Willys-Knight car was announced here today.

The newcomer to the sleeve-valve engined field, which is known as the Willys-Knight Standard Six, will be a companion car in the $1,100 price field to the current Willys-Knight Great Six and the Willys-Knight Special Six in the higher priced brackets.

In virtually every respect the new Willys-Knight Standard Six retains the same characteristics of design, performance and appearance as featured by the Special Six and the Great Six.

A range of colorful body models comprising a coach, four-door sedan, coupe and the touring will form the Standard Six body line. An exceptionally complete line of equipment, numerous innovations in interior appointments, together with striking new lines in body design are presented.

Powered with a 2 15-16 by 3¾-inch bore and stroke the engine gives a maximum brake h. p. of 46 at 3,000 r. p. m. The power plant employs a seven-bearing balanced crankshaft, an oil rectifier, and Bohnalite aluminum pistons. Conventional clutch, transmission and axle units are of special design while the chassis of 109½-inch wheelbase carrying 29 by 5.50-inch balloon tires is equipped with four-wheel brakes.

The new car employs a unit type power plant which is secured to the frame at four points, the rear engine supports being inclined to the rear at an angle of 45 degrees and attached to a corresponding pressed steel member riveted to the frame. This design tends to reduce engine vibration and make for smoother running at all speeds.

The conventional Knight engine practice of employing two cast iron sleeves for each cylinder is employed. The cylinder group cast en bloc is bolted to the cast iron upper half of the crankcase with the oil pan formed of pressed steel. The eccentric shaft supported in seven bearings is operated by a silent drive timing chain of 1¼-inch width and equipped with an automatic tightener.

Seven bronze back babbitt lined bearings of 2¼-inch diameter support the balanced crankshaft. The connecting rods having a center to center length of 9⅝ inches are equipped with centrifugally cast babbitt bearings of 1⅞ inches in diameter at the lower end while the piston pin bears in a bronze bushing at the upper end.

Bohnalite aluminum alloy pistons, embodying the Invar non-expansive strut, employ four rings of ¼-inch width, three of these being of the compression type and one of the oil control type—all being mounted above the pin. The pin is locked in the piston bosses by the conventional set screw.

Full pressure lubrication, in which oil is forced to the main bearings, connecting rods, camshaft bearings and timing chain is employed in conjunction with a Skinner rectifier. The latter formed integral with the exhaust manifold clarifies the oil, sending the gasoline content in the oil back to the intake manifold and the refined oil back into the crankcase.

The cooling system employing the pump type of circulation is fitted with a thermostat in the cylinder head water outlet to control the engine temperature so that the most satisfactory operating range is obtained under all conditions. The pump is bolted to the front of the cylinder block and formed in unit with the fan, the entire assembly being driven by a "vee" belt from the crankshaft pulley. The radiator is of the cellular type with the shell having the same characteristic contour as employed on the other Willys-Knight models.

Fuel is drawn from the rear gasoline tank by a Stewart vacuum tank, which delivers the gasoline through a filter to the plain-tube, pump well Tillotson carburetor, the latter being equipped with an air cleaner.

MARMON 68 EASY TO START

Not only an important factor in the unusual performance of the car but a distinct aid in cold weather starting and driving, the new duplex-down-draught manifolding system of the new Marmon 68 is characteristic of the thoroughness of Marmon engineering and research methods. The new system which is similar in many ways to that of the new Marmon 78, is regarded as one of the outstanding engineering advancements in modern straight-eight designs, says H. H. Blumenthal of the Marmon Company of Pittsburgh.

An exclusive Marmon development, the system serves eight cylinders with the ease and efficiency of serving but four. It is, in reality, two separate intake manifolds, each one supplying the explosive mixture to four cylinders with the use of a single carburetor. This feature has the advantage of eliminating duplicate adjustments and the difficulties of equalization that are encountered so often in the two carburetor design.

The new manifold system overcomes the bugaboo of "wet spots" or beads of gasoline that form in the manifold through condensation of the explosive mixture. Sharp turns and angles in the entire system are eliminated and the mixture flows from the carburetor to each cylinder in the same quantity and in the same degree of vaporization, thus making possible smooth operation at both low and high speeds and an unusual acceleration ability.

"All 7 of our family voted New Hupmobile first in secret ballot"

Oklahoma banker tells how his household selected the Six of the Century

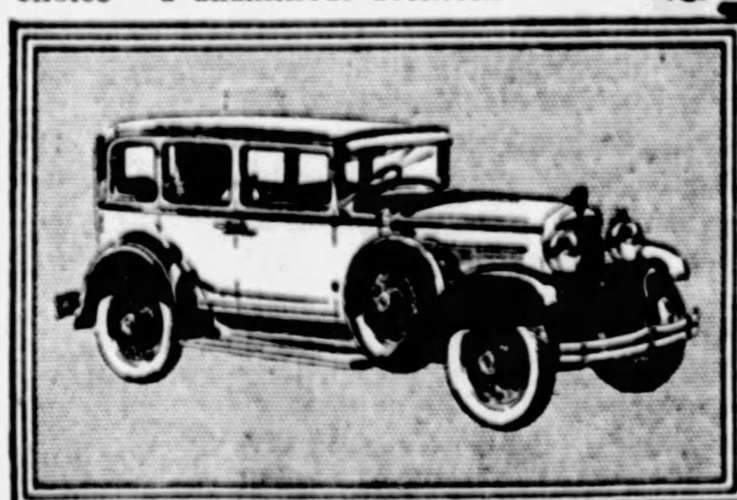
Popular suffrage has already cast an emphatic vote in favor of the New Hupmobile—The Six of the Century. An actual incident in Oklahoma serves to illustrate the universal agreement.

"Our family of seven went shopping for a new car," reports a prominent banker. "We inspected all the well-known makes before attempting a decision. That evening we decided to take a secret ballot on first, second and third choice. When the votes were counted the Hupmobile had received 7 for first choice — a unanimous decision."

When a new car makes such an impression it is no wonder that people stand in line to buy, offer premiums for immediate delivery and do other strange things that have not happened since the automobile was a baby and the century had just been born.

As a matter of recorded fact, this creation of new beauty and advanced mechanical excellence has so startled and delighted the motor world that it has been aptly christened the Six of the Century.

You'll find it a deceiving car as well as a beautiful car; for you will assume, as soon as you see it, that it is well above the $2,000 price. But it is well below and that is one of its pleasantest surprises.



24 Standard and Custom-equipped body styles, $1345 to $1625 f. o. b. Detroit, plus revenue tax.

COACH SEDAN, F. O. B. DETROIT

BRILLIANTLY Different

Dodge Brothers Victory Six is not only a new car but an entirely new and better kind of a car.

For the first time in history, body and chassis are a single, integral unit.

The wide, deep Victory chassis frame, flush with the body lines, eliminates the body sill and the customary body OVERHANG.

Major body parts are reduced from 367 to 8!

175 pounds of useless weight are cast off!

The gravity center is radically lowered—with head-room and road clearance unaffected.

And battleship construction (i. e., double steel walls) is applied for the first time to the construction of a motor car body.

The results can not be expressed—they must be experienced.

No unpleasant skidding or sideway at the corners. No back-wheel "chatter" when the Lockheed Hydraulic brakes are quickly applied.

A smoothness over cobble roads that you have never imagined possible.

A swift car that is safe—a moderate-priced car that is unsurpassed in smartness and individuality.

Tune in for Dodge Brothers Radio Program Every Thursday Night, 8 to 8:30 (Eastern Standard Time) NBC Red Network.

Hertz System to Get Newest Chevrolets

DETROIT, Feb. 11.—Wholesale replacement of former Chevrolet models with the new 1928 line is now under way by the Hertz Drivurself Corporation, one of the largest fleet users of passenger automobiles in the world, which controls the operation of automobile rental stations in more than 300 representative cities in the United States and Canada, according to advices received here from Charles W. Litsey, operating vice president and general manager of the Hertz [illegible] with headquarters at [illegible]

[illegible]nt of old models with new [illegible] is a regular periodical event with us, made possible by the extreme popularity of our Chevrolets," said Mr. Litsey. "This means that they are almost constantly on the road, and as a result they pile up a tremendous mileage total at the end of a year. In addition, their low initial cost and economy of operation enable us to pay on in Hertz mileage our full investment within 12 months, despite the fact that our Chevrolet rental rates are lower than on any other make of car in our service.

"During 1928 practically all former Chevrolet models will be replaced with the 'bigger and better' line in order that full advantage of the added features in the new car may be available for Hertz patrons. More than 3,000 Chevrolets are now in use by Hertz stations, and this number will be considerably augmented during the year because of the insistent calls for this make of car."

AMERICAN STAFF AT REO

A recent survey conducted by the Reo Motor Car Company in connection with its Americanization program, proves that Reo's employment policy has directly benefited Reo workers and Reo products.

Sixty per cent of the Reo factory employes either own or are buying homes and 88 per cent are native born Americans. Eight per cent more come from English-speaking countries, while only 4 per cent were born in countries where English is not spoken. A great majority of the foreign born, whose mother tongue is other than the English language, are naturalized, and have American customs.

According to C. A. Triphagen, sales manager of the Reo Motor Car Company, the foreign born factory workers are loyal and faithful employes.

"Our policy is strict in regard to aliens at the Reo plant," Mr. Triphagen states, "but it has the effect of keeping up the high standards of workmanship which we insist on for Reo pleasure cars and speed wagons. Before putting an alien on the payroll, he must assure the management that he wants to become an American citizen, adopt American habits of living, and obey the laws of the land. The Reo Americanization program has been in effect for the last eight years and has resulted in an organization made up of contented workers whose loyalty to the Reo Motor Car Company is reflected in the high quality of Reo products."

NASH PRICES NOW LOWER

Announcement has been made by C. W. Nash, president of the Nash Motors Company, of reduced prices, ranging through Standard Six, Special Six and Advanced Six series. These reductions follow hard on the heels of heavy sales at the opening motor shows of the year where the Nash display, with its emphasis on style and new color harmonies, attracted great attention.

Nash officials point to this move as the aggressive forerunner of big Nash expansion in sales throughout the country, with Nash in 1928 assuming even more pronounced leadership in its field than ever before.

In speaking of this price reduction, C. W. Nash said:

"Since the New York automobile show I have been traveling the country attending other shows and dealer meetings and everywhere I find encouraging evidence of healthy business. All that I have been quoted as saying about the prosperous general condition of the country, has been confirmed in the course of these trips.

"Our own sales are proceeding with gratifying force and in view of the fact that our new prices now make the current Nash line the greatest values we have ever offered, I look for even bigger business."

Lubrication First To Suggest Itself

When the car suddenly begins to steer hard, lack of lubrication is the first thing to suggest itself.

Oil to Automobile Like Blood to Man

Oil is life to the car. Never neglect changing the lubrication fluids at the proper time.

New Oldsmobile Powerful Vehicle

Living fully up to the reports of what it would be, the new larger and more powerful Oldsmobile Six is a featured display of the Oldsmobile-Pittsburgh Company. This entirely new automobile represents two years' work by Oldsmobile engineers, more than 1,000,000 miles of testing and it has been proclaimed "the car two years ahead."

Features heretofore considered alien to the common run of cars in the Oldsmobile price range are found in the new model. Its high compression engine develops 55 horsepower and will accelerate from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 5½ seconds. It has registered 74 miles an hour at the General Motors proving ground.

From short, sturdy spokes of the wheels to the graceful curves of its Fisher body, the new Oldsmobile is pronounced a symphony of automotive expression.

Full wide doors of flush construction, broad plate glass windows and narrow posts provide what driver and passenger both now demand—wide vision. Deep cushioned, form-fitting seats add one more point in the constant endeavor to provide greater comfort. The space provided by the longer wheel base gives more "leg room" and increases comfort. Considerable width has been added to both the rear and front seats.

Ful crown fenders, larger parabole lights and a high, gracefully curved radiator form an ensemble that catches the eye at once. The unusual height of the radiator permits the high hood and cowl to be brought back to the body in a straight line, greatly emphasizing the sweeping length of the front end.

A broad belt panel of convex contour, bordered by two mouldings, forms the center line of the body. This panel starts at the cowl and extends to the back of the rear window, where it converges into a distinctive V. This line is continued around the back of the car in a moulding. This band and the window reveals are finished in a tone harmonizing with the body color.

An individual characteristic of the design is in a moulding which starts at the junction of the hood and dust apron, curving away from the apron until it reaches the rear of the cowl and then following the cowl line upward to the start of the windshield. From this point the moulding curves forward, joining its companion sector at the radiator cap. This curve forms a graceful V-shaped saddle over the cowl and hood and is finished in a companion tone.

The Fisher body is of composite steel and wood construction, insuring durability, safety and quietness.

Prosperity—Health—Happiness

W. C. DURANT SAYS:

"EVERY time a man buys a motor car he contributes to the nation's continued prosperity, in which he both directly and indirectly shares.

"Theodore Roosevelt used to say that thrift is wise spending. And that is certainly proving to be true in the light of our modern economical situation.

"The 'old sock' has passed out of the picture. In the 'sock' it did no one any good, including the owner.

"Today people spend their money, all along the line, until it comes back to the original spender, who starts it going again. Everyone enjoys its use—each living better than he ever did before because of it.

"It is hard to see how money could be spent more wisely or be made to go further than in the purchase of an automobile. In fact, I do not know of any way to obtain so much value for a given sum.

"It gives man freedom and independence. Distance is no longer any obstacle, and with the good cars and good roads of today, weather, temperature and night are no obstacles either.

"The automobile has enabled man to enjoy such freedom, such power and control over his movements for the first time in history. As Arthur Brisbane, the famous editor, says, a man should spend his last nickel if necessary for the sense of personal power and confidence an automobile gives to a man.

"The whole family benefits in health and experience through the ownership of an automobile. It means open air and a change of scene whenever it is desired or needed—without as much effort and no more expense than going to the movies, perhaps less.

W. C. DURANT

"You give your purchase money to the local Star-Durant dealer. Some of it he keeps and spends right in town. The rest of the money goes to the manufacturer. He pays wages, the largest payroll of any industry. That means employment, which is the very backbone of the nation's prosperity.

"So buy a car if you wish to continue to enjoy the present prosperity of the country. Buy wisely the car which is most economical for you—but buy a car. Keep on buying cars as you need new ones. It is the most important thing you can do with your money."

NEW FRANKLIN LEADING WAY

Changing traffic conditions and the wider use to which all types of cars are being put by owners, has resulted in a decided change in design of the chauffeur-driven automobile. The town car is being called upon for extended tours or for trips to country homes and so must be designed to meet conditions existing on country highways as well as in city traffic.

According to C. G. McKinley, of the McKinley-Gregg Auto Company, the chauffeur-driven car is becoming lighter and more maneuverable, with the Franklin Automobile Company of Syracuse, N. Y., leading the way in this new order of design.

The Franklin Airman Limousine weighs from 300 to 1,000 pounds less than the customary car of this type and is operated in dense traffic with surprising ease. It is equally adaptable to the rough roads found in many sections of the country and can maintain a high rate of speed all day without tiring passengers. Every inch of space has been made available for the further comfort of the passengers.

Buick Extending Service Stations

In keeping with its determination to distribute reliable transportation and not merely individual motor cars, the Buick Motor Company has continued, during the last year, to extend its service organization, which is already world-wide in scope. Buick's authorized service stations in the United States alone now total about 4,600, of which about 100 were added during 1927.

The emphasis which Buick places upon service is illustrated by the system which it has inaugurated, throughout the country, for filling any parts order which could possibly arise, at any point whatever, within 24 hours. Supplementing the parts departments maintained by every Buick dealer, branch and distributor, there are huge parts depots, in selected cities of the country, and these depots keep on hand at all times, full stocks of parts for every Buick ever built.

This phase of Buick service was made necessary, by the fact that thousands of Buicks 10 and more years old are still in active service. There is, therefore, a moral obligation to provide replacements which these cars my presumably require from time to time. The parts depots are so located that no Buick dealer is more than 24 hours distant, an arrangement which insures prompt service to the owner.

FALCON PLANS EXPANSION

Production plans of the Falcon Motors Corporation, manufacturers of the Falcon-Knight Six, show a 200 per cent increase over production for the nine months, starting with April of last year, during which this orgnization has been in business.

With a dealer organization covering 750 dealer outlets, located in all basic sales points in the country, this manufacturer has built and distributed to owners approximately 10,000 cars in its initial sales and manufacturing campaign.

Amperage of 100 Used in Starting

In keeping check on the condition of the battery, it is well to remember that an amperage of 100 is used when starting under ordinary circumstances.

$6,082,303 COLLECTION

Total receipts from 1927 motor vehicle licenses reached $6,082,303, the greatest sum in the history of the state of Washington, according to Charles R. Maybury, state license director. This was an increase of $458,177 over 1926. The number of motor vehicle licenses issued totaled 298,961.

Private vehicle licenses issued totaled $24,575.

For hire plates, including taxicabs, numbered 1,476, with receipts of $71,627. A total of 616 buses brought receipts of $63,654.70. Trailer plates numbered 2,072, with receipts of $44,858.66.

Other classes of plates issued included 4,826 "exempt" machines, 4,562 dealers' cars, 2,501 motorcycles and 16 motorcycle dealers.

Biggest January in Studebaker history

58% increase in actual retail deliveries over same month last year

See these four great Studebaker lines of fine cars and you will understand why

ACTUAL retail deliveries of Studebaker dealers for January, 1928, exceeded those of January, 1927, by 58 per cent. They were the largest in the history of the Corporation for that month, which so often sounds the sales keynote for the year.

The reason back of this sales record is the championship performance of Studebaker motor cars—demonstrated by a succession of spectacular feats of endurance and speed—culminating in Studebaker's unique position of holding all the highest endurance and speed records for fully equipped stock cars, regardless of power or price.

See the four great lines of Studebaker cars which are sweeping the country today. But do more than simply see them on the showroom floor—ride in them and drive them! Then you will know that they embody the most advanced engineering of 1928 combined with Studebaker's 76-year-old traditions of quality.

Values in Four Price Fields

The New President Straight Eight—100-horsepower, 80-miles-an-hour, 131-inch wheelbase—imposing beauty and luxury—$1985 to $2450.

The New Dictator—champion of its price class, with a record of mile-a-minute speed sustained for 24 hours—a lot of car for the money, $1195 to $1295—a genuine, One-Profit value.

The Commander—the World Champion car which holds all the highest speed and endurance records for fully equipped stock cars, regardless of power or price. 25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes. Nothing else on earth ever traveled so far so fast. $1495 to $1695.

The New American Edition of the Erskine Six—larger and more powerful—yet lower in price—$795 to $965—a car of genuinely high quality—40-miles-an-hour the day you buy it, 62-mile speed later. Many items of extra equipment, including shock absorbers.

All prices f. o. b. factory—shock absorbers standard equipment on all models.

Auto Industry to Step-Up Production This Month

HIGH OUTPUTS NOW OBTAIN IN MOTOR PLANTS

Truck and Tire Business Reported Good — Accessory Men Enjoy Better Schedules

DETROIT, Feb. 11.—The passenger car industry continues to operate on fairly high schedules, although they have not been increased as rapidly as had been expected, according to B. H. Cram, industry authority.

This is due largely to the fact that difficulties have been experienced in getting materials. Also minor troubles in getting into production on the new models and lines have taken place in many of the factories. It is expected, however, that these have now been overcome and that it will be possible to step up output sharply before the end of February. Following the introduction of the new products and the interest created at the various automobile shows, together with heavy wholesale ordering, sales are showing a steady climb.

Truck and bus production remains practically the same as previously reported. January output showed an increase over the preceding month and a further gain is looked for this month. Sales are improving slowly.

While tire output is satisfactory for this time of the year it is not up to expectations. The withdrawal of Ford orders until changes have been completed to permit of increased production has been a severe blow to many tire manufacturers who were stocked on rubber to meet his expected requirements. Heavy Ford ordering is not looked for for at least another 30 days. Renewal sales are running above the average.

Parts and accessory manufacturers are operating on high schedules. January was a record month for many and February is expected to be a good one for this branch of the industry. Orginal equipment sales are heavy and improvement is being noted in the field.

Noises Indicate Auto's Condition

Noises in an automobile are generally described as a knock, a grinding or scratching sound, a growl or hum, a squeak, a hiss and a rattling. The knock is an indication of looseness, due to wear, a break or a loose bolt and sometimes to a bent part. The grinding or scratching is liable to be due to a dirty or chipped ball or roller bearing, to lack of lubrication of a bearing, to a loose or bent part rubbing against another or to the speedometer gears. The growl or hum generally comes from some of the gears, being due to wear of them or the bearing of their shafts, or to their being improperly set.

'Art' Banned on Student Autos at Old Oxford

OXFORD, England, Feb. 11. ENGLISH undergraduates and American students who come to this senior university are given much less freedom in owning and operating motor cars than their cousins in most American universities.

No freshman is permitted to own a motor car. When a student in his second year wishes to keep a car at the university he must obtain a special license from the proctors, or disciplinary officers of the university. He must keep his car in a licensed garage. He must have a special green light on it to show that it belongs to a student. He may not keep a motor car within 20 miles of Oxford unless it is licensed.

The machines owned by students here are just as old, if not older, than the machines seen on the campus drives of America. But they do not bear the cartoons and chalk drawings which "illuminate" American students' cars.

WHIPPET HELD QUALITY AUTO

Well informed automobile men continue to accord the Whippet the quality leadership in the light car field. They base this admission of superiority on the high standard of performance that has made this car conspicuous in the Whippet field since its initial introduction more than 19 months ago, and by a comparison with automobiles of other makers selling in the same price field.

More than 150,000 of these modern light four-cylinder cars are now in the hands of drivers, it being estimated that they have traveled a total of almost a half billion miles. Notable records for speed, power, stamina, fuel economy and serviceability have been established by the Whippet over the 19-month period.

Although the Whippet has proved the most popular line of cars ever built by Willys-Overalnd and has enjoyed a high sales volume since its introduction, officials of the company declare that indications are that all former sales records will be shattered by the 1928 line.

31 Cents Is Cost To Travel In Air

Figures just compiled by the Department of Commerce show that the cost of travel by airplane a mile is 31.28 cents. Postoffice Department figures during 1926 show that the average cost a mile for carrying the mail was $1,087.

Dodge Staging New Transport Exhibit

A new note in automotive merchandising has been struck by Dodge Brothers in the transportation exposition now being staged in Philadelphia. Under one roof and occupying a floor space of 44,000 square feet, all of the passenger car types, trucks, commercial cars and coaches made by Dodge Brothers and its Graham Brothers truck division have been placed on display.

This is to be the most complete exposition of automotive transportation ever shown by a single company in Philadelphia and quite likely in the United States. There are 148 trucks, cars and commercial vehicles, including 19 passenger car types shown. All of the usual truck body types are included, as well as many of those rarely seen in an automotive show, such as line wagons used by telephone companies, oil tank trucks, and truck chassis with a wide variety of special equipment.

Five different truck sizes ranging from ½ ton to 2 tons capacity and powered with four cylinder and six cylinder Dodge Brothers engines are displayed. The whole field of truck uses is covered so that any business man, no matter in what field he is interested, will find the show educative. Those who designed the exposition have made it as comprehensive as possible. To this end, many manufacturers of special equipment for Dodge Brothers engines and chassis are showing their equipment and have sent their representatives to the exposition to demonstrate the uses of their products.

U. S. Tops Russia In Radio Progress

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Although Russia was excluded from the International Radio Telegraph Conference, in which 77 nations participated, reports to the Department of Commerce indicate the Soviet government is leading the world outside the United States in radio development.

QUIT ALCOHOL AS AUTO FUEL

There are slight prospects of any material production or consumption of alcohol motor fuel in the United Kingdom, as "it seems clear that the raw material for commercial treatment will be restricted in quantity," according to a report from the United States trade commissioner at London.

SUPER LUXURY IN STEARNS CAR

The last two years have witnessed a trend on the part of a certain group of motor car owners in this country toward super-luxury, says H. J. Leonard, president, Stearns-Knight Company. The demand for a motor car which is out of the general run of even the highest-priced cars has been markedly felt. Requirements are such, on the part of the buyers who make up this class of car users, that the only product which will fully satisfy them must, in many ways, be somewhat of a built-to-order product.

In many respects the Stearns-Knight has felt this trend in a marked fashion, largely because of the individual and exclusive features of mechanical construction which have always characterized the production of this car and also because of the advances made by the Stearns-Knight Company last year when it introduced the first eight-in-line Knight sleeve-valve motor to be built in the country.

This year, the standard line of six and eight-cylindered Stearns-Knight cars will be augmented by a de luxe line utilizing the eight-cylinder power plant and incorporating many entirely new features of comfort, convenience and luxury.

Good Test Only Rule In Buying Used Car

Any experienced car owner should be able to select a good used car from the many available if he will but remember to test the machine thoroughly before making his purchase.

She Gives the Low Ones

HATS off to the miss who knows her tags! Yes, sir—for every stage in the issuing of registrations, from the reservation of the much-coveted low numbers to the actual delivery of the plates, is old stuff for Miss Louise M. Fisher, private secretary to Benjamin G. Eynon, state registrar of motor vehicles.

Her service with the Department of Highways dates back to March, 1918, when a very green typist timidly approached George M. Brewster, then registrar of motor vehicles, for a job. Mr. Brewster wasn't at all sure he needed a typist at that time, but evidently some of Miss Fisher's "sure-fire" personality got across to him, for he encouraged L. S. Person, assistant registrar, to try her abilities at the then munificent salary of 25 cents an hour.

Needless to say, Miss Fisher made the grade, even to being sport enough to act as jaintress at the request of some of the older employes who were thus properly convinced that Louise was an A-No. 1 good sport; and in July of that same year she was placed on the permanent payroll as a typist.

Those were the good old days when the entire department held sway on one floor of a building in Second street on the site now occupied by a confectionery and tea room. As the automobile rapidly replaced the one-horse shay the motor vehicle bureau prospered and expanded until the necessity for more space caused the department to remove its offices to a larger building where it remained for several years. Incidentally, Benjamin G. Eynon was one of the more important additions to the organization about this time.

And then some thoughtful commissioner conceived the brilliant idea of constructing an entire building for the use of "Big Ben" and his assistants. So Building No. 1, which is now jokingly designated as one of the temporary buildings came into existence over night, so to speak.

Here Miss Fisher, as head bookkeeper, added and totalled and balanced the figures on the accounts of the ever-growing bureau, handled the personnel work, met the daily callers and attended to Mr. Eynon's personal work and correspondence. This was quite a big job for such a little girl, and when the bureau grew to such an extent that an assistant was necessary for the personnel work, Miss Fisher's attention was centered on secretarial and special number work only.

Miss Fisher's success as chief clerk through the 10 years she has been associated with the Bureau of Motor Vehicles should be attributed to some specific characteristics. Well—a smile will go a long way; add to that the best disposition ever invested in a woman already endowed with business ability—and you have the secret.

MISS LOUISE M. FISHER

U. S. SYSTEM TO GET MANY STATE ROADS

New Routings to Be Placed Soon; Flinn, Buffalo-Pittsburgh Roads Affected.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 11.—Many important highways in the state will lose their Pennsylvania designations in a short time and be known as United States highways, Samuel Eckels, chief engineer and deputy secretary, announced today. Revised tourist maps will be issued and the highways themselves remarked with signs in the shape of the United States shield.

[illegible] designation of these United States [illegible] Mr. Eckels explained, in [illegible] the use of the standard markers, is in accordance with recommendations of a committee representing the American Association of State Highway Officials in co-operation with the United States Bureau of Roads.

Familiar routes in Pennsylvania such as the Lincoln highway, Lackawanna trail, William Penn highway, Susquehanna trail and many others no longer will be officially known under those names. They will take such designations as United States Highway No. 119 or United States Highway No. 611.

The Lincoln highway, at present designated as Pennsylvania Route No. 1, under the new scheme will be United States Route No. 30, from the Ohio state line west of Harshaville, Pa., to Philadelphia. East of Philadelphia to Morristown it will carry the designation United States Route No. 1.

U. S. Route No. 611 will be the official designation for the Lackawanna Trail, which now is known as Route No. 2. From Philadelphia to Scranton it will be Route No. 611, and from Scranton to the New York state line its number will be 11.

Under the new system, the William Penn highway, now known as Route No. 3, will be U. S. Route No. 22, except between Harrisburg and Amity Hall, where it will be designated as U. S. Route No. 11.

The Susquehanna Trail is to be U. S. Route No. 111, instead of Pennsylvania Rout No. 4, between Harrisburg and Shrewsbury, and from this city to Sunbury the designation will be U. S. Route No. 11. The former U. S. route number will be on the poles from Sunbury through Williamsport to the New York state line south of Elmira.

Under the present highway designation, the Lakes to Sea route is No. 6, but under the U. S. system it will bear a variety of numbers. Between Waterford and Cambridge Springs it will be U. S. Route No. 6; from Cambridge Springs to Meadville it will be U. S. Route No. 19; from Meadville to Tyrone, U. S. Route No. 322; from Tyrone to Water Street, State Route No. 56. The route from Water Street will merge with the William Penn Highway to Mill Creek and State Route No. 5 from Mill Creek to Reedsville and Lewistown, where again it will parallel the William Penn to Newport. From this point it again will be known as State Route No. 5 through New Bloomfield, Duncannon, Marysville and Harrisburg to Downingtown, West Chester and Philadelphia.

What is now known as the Old Monument trail, or state route No. 6, will carry markers of U. S. route No. 219. The route starts at the Maryland state line, south of Salisbury, and goes northward to the New York state line, north of Bradford.

The Buffalo-Pittsburgh highway, now route No. 10, will be U. S. route 119 from the intersection with the William Penn east of Blairsville and from Dubois north to the New York lin it w'll be U. S. route No. 219.

U. S. route No. 422 will be the marking for part of the Benjamin Franklin highway, now state route No. 17. Thi number will start at the intersection with the William Penn near Mundys Corners where it will parallel the William Penn to Reading and then carry U. S. route No. 422 between Reading and Philadelphia.

The William Flinn highway will continue to carry state route No. 8 from Pittsburgh to Erie, and south of Pittsburgh to the West Virginia line it will be U. S. route No. 19.

One Drink May Cost Car Owner His Insurance

OFFICIALS of an insurance exchange operated by the Keystone Automobile Club have announced that the insurance of any member found to have driven a motor vehicle when under the influence of liquor will be cancelled.

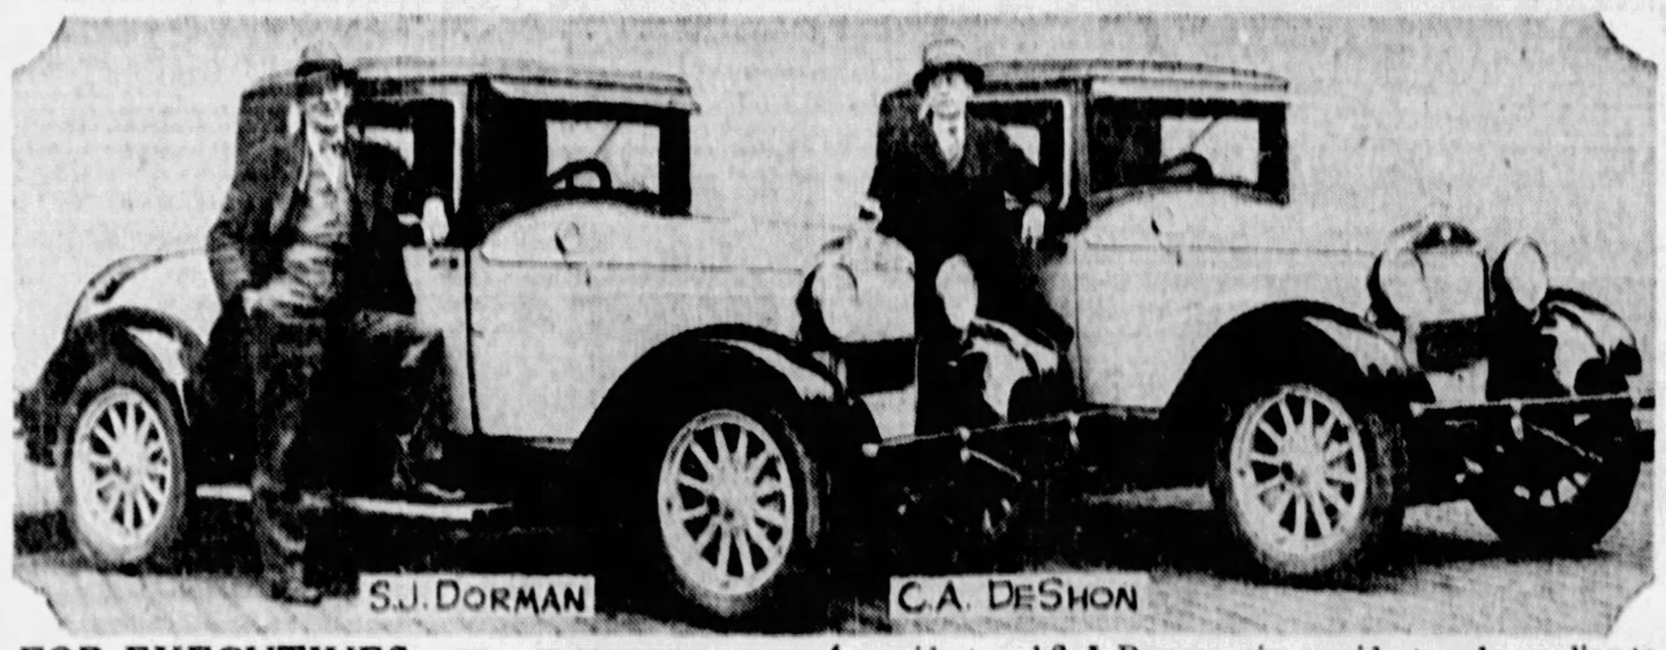
"We have found," said a statement, "that just one drink of the vile concoctions masquerading under whisky labels is often sufficient to change normally considerate and competent drivers into irresponsible operators, a menace to themselves and to users of the highways.

"If our own investigation shows that the driver had a drink before the accident, or had been in the habit of mixing hooch and gasoline, no matter how moderately, we are not concerned whether there is sufficient legal evidence to convict him of driving while drunk; his policy is cancelled forthwith."

Motor Engines Used On Trains

Steam engines on the passenger train service of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad are being replaced by motor locomotives in the Shenandoah region. This adoption follows experiments in which gasoline motor engines were found able to haul cars accommodating 71 passengers and baggage and an express and mail car in good time. However, railroad officials think that much more powerful gasoline engines will have to be perfected before they can handle unnusually heavy traffic and make steep grades.

Promoting Prosperity in Printing Field



FOR EXECUTIVES—The DeShon Dorman Printing Company, 705 Webster avenue, have added two new Essex coupes to their equipment to care for increasing business. The new cars will be used by C. A. DeShon, president, and S. J. Dorman, vice president, and according to these officers the Essex cars were selected because of satisfactory service rendered by other Essex cars. The motors were delivered by the Pierpoint Motor Company.

AUBURN MEETS PUBLIC DEMAND

"Any automobile manufacturer can produce a car that will spring into instant favor with its appearance," says J. A. O'Malley of the Pittsburgh Auburn Company," but the producing of a car that will endure is a different task.

"The public has become motorwise. It realizes that paint and varnish, beautiful lines, luxurious appointments and similar refinements are all necessary parts of the present day automobile, and it demands them, but it further realizes that unless the car that bears these has stamina and endurance, and that the company which is making this particular car has a definite policy of protection for the buyer, it may be buying a flash in the pan model.

"The successful manufacturer is the one who incorporates all these refinements and at the same time year after year continues to build up a record for endurance achievement. There must be constant improvement, but there must be no change that is so radical that the models of the previous year are antiquated. Once the public realizes this it turns its automobile dollars into that channel.

"In the last three years Auburn has doubled its sales each year. It will more than do that in 1928. There can be no question that any company which shows such a phenomenal growth is producing a car that not only meets favor with the public in appearance, but endurance."

Vision-Imagination Transportation Need

Providing transportation in the cities of today calls for the exercise by street railway officials of both vision and imagination to meet rapidly changing conditions, according to Walter A. Draper, president of the Cincinnati Street Railways.

"The introduction of the motor coach has simply followed the very logical line of endeavor to provide public transportation partaking of the nature of the private automobile," he says. "Opinions of the users of transportation differ as the relative comfort and desirability of car and coach, but there are enough who demand the coach to make it necessary for that form of transportation to be reckoned with. It is an encouraging sign that transportation companies engaged in operating street cars have also recognized their opportunity, if not indeed their obligation to the public, to the extent of undertaking the operation of motor coaches."

MEXICO WILL BUY MORE CARS

Approximately 5,150 automobiles of American manufacture were exported to Mexico through Laredo, Tex., during 1927. Complete records through other ports are lacking, but it is estimated that the total trade was more than 15,000 cars.

While fewer automobiles were sold in Mexico than in the preceding year, total value was greater as higher priced cars now are in demand in that country.

Sales in Mexico this year are expected to set new records. Business conditions are more settled than last year. Money is coming out of hiding and again is being invested in various kinds of enterprises.

TRAFFIC MEN PLAN SESSION

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 11.—A national conference on street and highway traffic at which officials from every city and state are expected will be held here May 16. How to check the menace of motor vehicle traffic will be the main topic of discussion at the conference. Other important subjects proposed for the sessions are uniformity of traffic regulations, signals and signs and the advisablity of combining the various organizations conducting traffic research with representation in one central body.

YOUR CAR

How To Drive & Care For It

By—Don C. Streeter

Service Manager of the Reo Motor Car Company

TO SKID OR NOT TO SKID

SKIDS do not just happen. They result from improper operation of the car on wet, muddy or icy pavements and can be prevented when the cause is understood. This does not mean that it is necessary to travel at a snail's pace at the least sign of rain. It does mean, however, that more caution should be exercised when approaching crossings.

Skidding results in two ways. It is due to a slipping of the wheels when the brakes are applied or a slipping of the wheels when power is applied, the former type of skid being most common. On a heavily crowned road which is icy, however, a power skid may be obtained by accelerating too rapidly. As soon as the rear wheels start to spin, the rear of the car will begin to slide towards the ditch.

The more common skid occurs when the brakes are applied too vigorously and the wheels become locked. Losing traction, they have no more ability to guide the car and it slides around like a block of wood thrown across a stretch of ice.

PRACTICING TO AVOID THEM

When the car begins to skid release the brakes immediately. Even if some obstruction is in front of the car it will do almost no good to hold the brakes down hard while the car is sliding. It is much better to release the brakes, allow the wheels to turn and endeavor to steer or dodge out of the way. The ability to do this cannot be developed on the spur of the moment, but should be learned, for skids are bound to happen where cars are driven in all weather. It is, therefore, better to practice skidding on a broad street where there is no traffic than to be ignorant of skidding, its causes and remedies when an emergency arises.

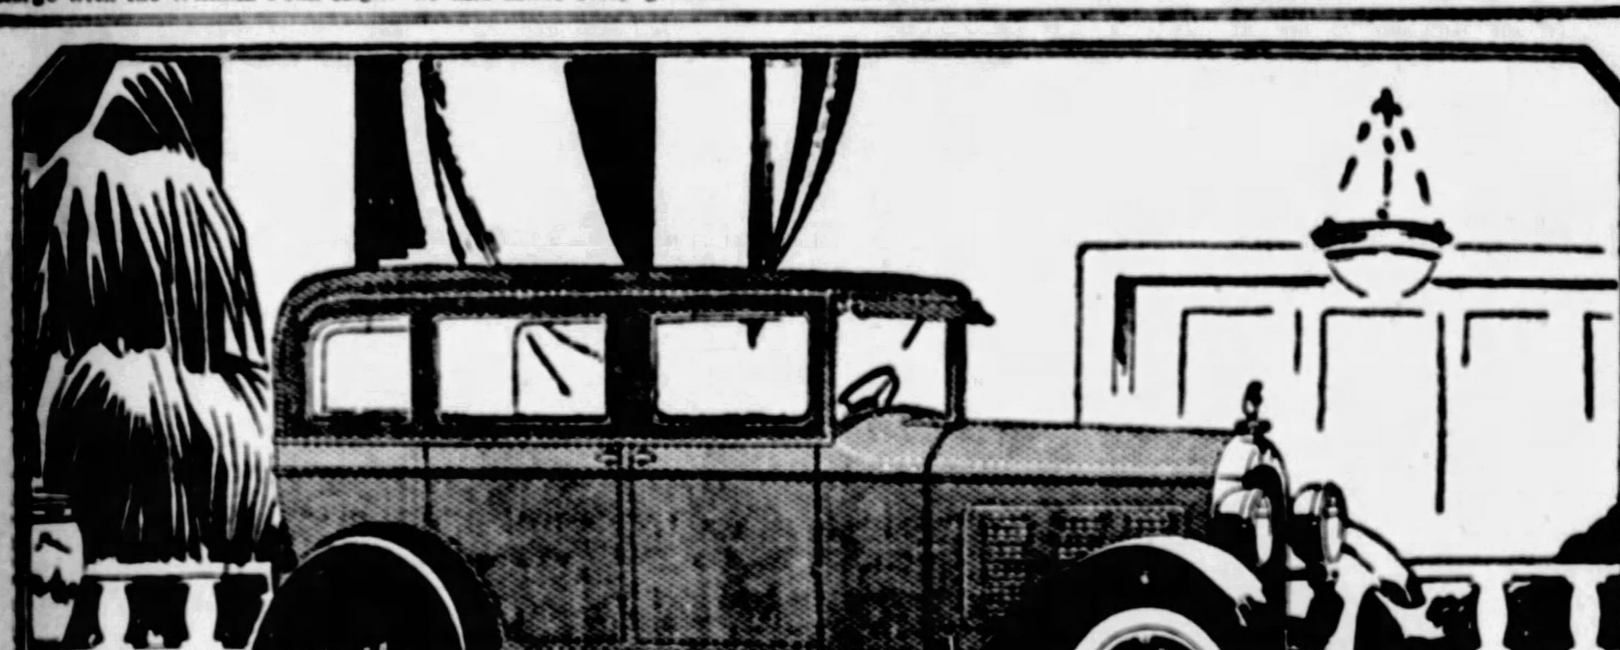
If the street is icy drive at about 10 miles an hour (no faster). Look back and ahead to make sure there is no nearby traffic. Then apply the brakes vigorously. The instant the cars gets out of a straight line and begins to go sideways, release the brakes and straighten up the car by means of the steering wheel. Repeat this practice until it becomes instinctive to release the brakes, straighten up the car, and apply the brakes again. Then when in a jam you will automatically do the right thing, come out of skid, and be able to avoid an accident.

GERMANS PLAN ROADSIDE AID

BERLIN, Feb. 11.—"Automobilists' Aid Company, Ltd.," is the name of a newly founded organization for technically and personally aiding automobilists who meet with an accident on the road, by means of emergency stations to be erected throughout the country.

The founders of the company were governed by the idea that automobilists in case of accidents in the open country should be placed in a position to telephone to some accessible emergency station.

All police authorities in Prussia have been instructed to assist the work of the organization and especially in country districts where there is no postoffice to place their service telephone at the disposal of members of the organization.



New Falcon-Knight models form a beautiful display

Beautiful body designs, with ample room for comfort, feature the new Falcon-Knight Six models. The lines are arresting — the interiors are smart.

There is a remarkable feeling of restfulness and ease in driving this new Falcon-Knight car. Advanced body engineering and the famous Falcon-Knight sleeve-valve engine, combine to give an amazing satisfaction in motoring.

Since its introduction a year ago Falcon-Knight Six has added thousands to the list of men and women who now fully realize the great difference between sleeve-valve and poppet-valve performance.

The remarkable smoothness and activity of the Falcon-Knight double-sleeve-valve engine, is the outstanding advancement in motor design in the entire automotive industry.

Be sure to drive the new Falcon-Knight Six before selecting a car.

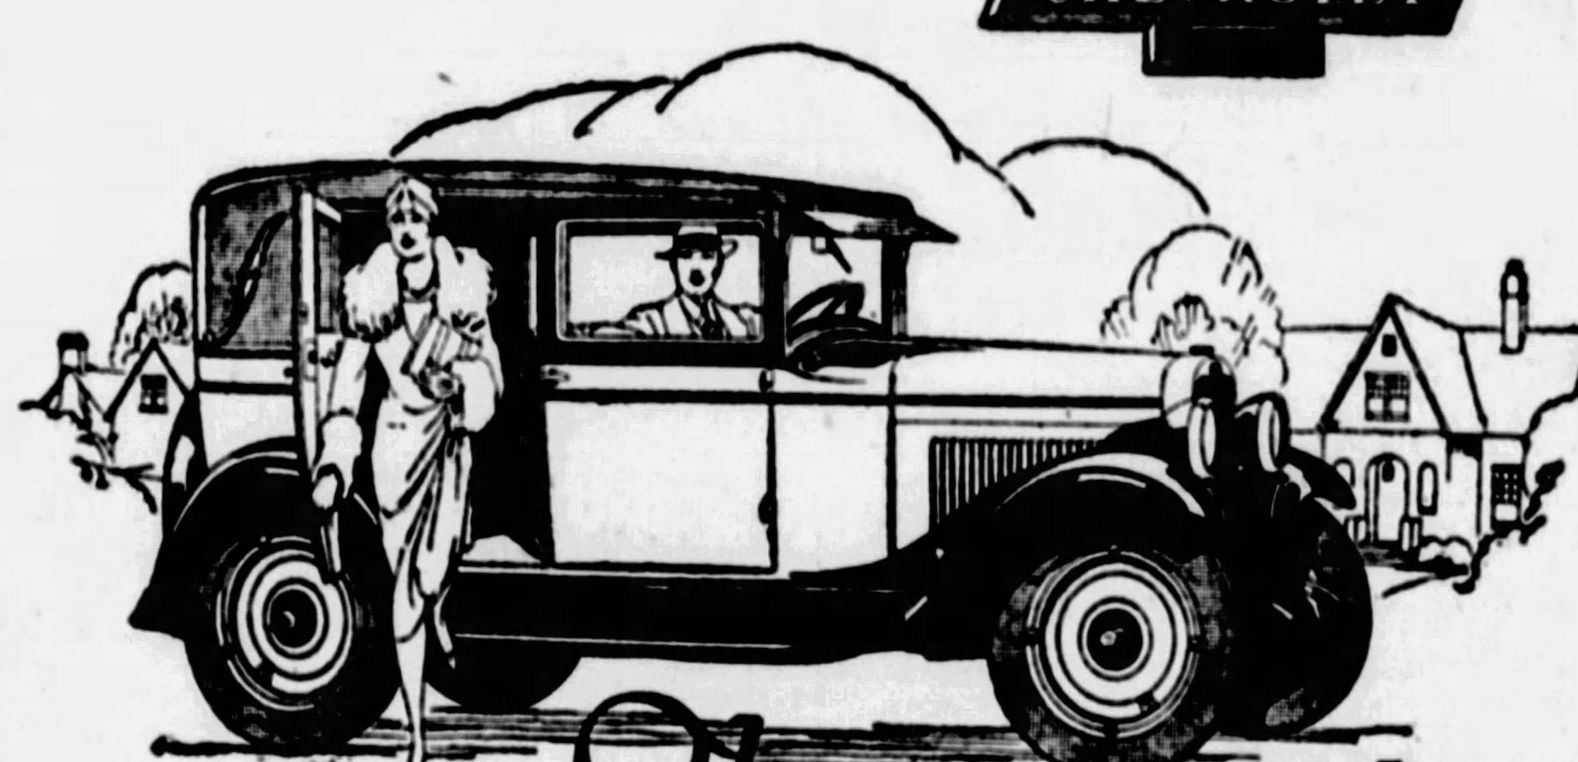
CHEVROLET



The Imperial Landau

The World's Most Luxurious Low Priced Car

The longest wheelbase ever offered in a low-priced car! The riding ease of four semi-elliptic shock-absorber springs set parallel to the frame. The beauty and comfort of marvelous new Fisher bodies! The safety of non-locking four-wheel brakes! And the thrilling performance of an improved valve-in-head motor!

That's what you get in the Bigger and Better Chevrolet—a car so beautiful, so comfortable and so impressive that it is hailed everywhere as the world's most luxurious low-priced automobile.

Here, for the first time in the history of the automotive industry, is a low-priced car that embodies all the distinguished beauty, and features of advanced design demanded in the world's highest priced automobiles.

Among the notable new engineering features incorporated are alloy "invar strut" constant clearance pistons; non-locking four-wheel brakes; specially designed hydro-laminated camshaft gears; mushroom type valve tappets; a crankcase breathing system; ball bearing worm and gear steering mechanism; and a new steel motor enclosure!

But amazing as these new mechanical advancements are, they are matched in impressiveness by the marvelous beauty that has been achieved in the Bigger and Better Chevrolet. Built on a wheelbase of 107 inches . . . swung low to the road . . . and with the hood streaming back in graceful unbroken lines to blend with the body contours, the Bigger and Better Chevrolet represents one of the greatest style triumphs ever presented in the low-price field.

Come in and see it today. Note the beauty, the symmetry and the roominess of the beautiful new Fisher bodies. Study the chassis, unit by unit—and observe the advanced engineering . . . the high quality construction throughout. Go for a drive—as far as you like, and over roads of your own selection.

Do that—and like tens of thousands of others, you will say that here is the most luxurious low-priced car ever offered!

"Smitty" Teases Cougar on Desert

By WALTER CHAMBERS.

The first time I saw "Smitty" was the day Lindbergh landed in New York harbor and I fought through the largest crowd ever assembled in any place to get photographs to where he waited with a plane in West Side Park, Jersey City.

"Smitty," if you don't know him, is J. Warren Smith, manager, Mayer Aircraft Corporation, Mayer Field, Bridgeville. On that memorable day last June he was in New York to rush photographs of New York's reception to Col. Lindbergh back to the Gazette Times. The quick take-off and rapid "climb" he made that day are unequaled in my experience. He left the ground 65 feet from where he "gave her the gun." By the time he had gone 1,000 feet he was half that high and he went climbing his way into the sun until the roar of his motor quieted to a hum and then to silence.

Darkness caught him as he passed Greensburg. He had tried his best to make it in and failed, not because of his own powers, but because the millions of New Yorkers kept me away from the field just an hour and three-quarters longer than I had promised—and expected.

LOST IN DARKNESS

When he had passed Greensburg Smitty flew on in darkness—lost. He flew over what he thought was his field only to find that he was over McKeesport. He tried to make Bettis Field but couldn't find it. And so:

He watched a line of automobiles rounding a curve in the highway, their lights throwing a beam across a vacant field. For ten minutes he "stalled" around and around, coming closer to the ground each circle. Then he waited for two automobiles, 35 feet apart, coming up the hill. As the first one started around the curve "Smitty" "pancaked" her down in almost a nose-dive and leveled her off. As the beam from the second car lighted his runway he made a "three-point" landing, which is to say the wheels and tail-skid dropped gently to earth simultaneously. The Gazette Times had a full page of pictures the next morning.

Smitty's record, in nine years, is 8,000 hours in the air with only one accident. A girl passenger out in Ohio once became frightened and "froze" the controls, that is, she grabbed them and toppled them over in a tail-spin. Neither was seriously hurt despite an 80-foot fall.

$1,000 FOR $200 PLANE

In spite of it all "Smitty" was a "sucker" when he went into the flying game back in 1919. He paid $1,000 for a second-hand "Jenny" which the government, if only he had known, would have sold him new for $200 or at most $300. Thousands were sold for $100 each.

Smitty has just sold his garage and had $4,500 when a barnstormer, or gypsy pilot, flew into a vacant field near his home and started carrying passengers at $5 each. Smitty bought the plane and eight days later it had taken in $3,080. But then it crashed and it cost him another $2,100 to fix it up. When the pilot had been paid Smitty was right where he stood on the original purchase except that he had in five hours "time." At seven hours he "soloed" and fired his pilot. He couldn't do it nowadays.

With his plane repaired Smitty "took off" for Long Beach, out of Los Angeles, where he stayed for a year and a half. For the next two years Smitty barnstormed between Minneapolis and the Pacific Coast, buying planes from the Curtiss company in Minneapolis and flying them West, carrying passengers at every stop en route.

PURCHASES NINE SHIPS

In the spring of 1923 Smitty went to Rockwell Field, San Diego, and purchased five "Jennies" and four Thomas Morse scout planes from the government. "I'd never flown anything but 'Jennies' and 'Standards,'" he said, "and when I got my first Tommy set up the army and navy fliers who saw it on the field nearly scared me to death with predictions of losing a wing or tail, motor failures, or other catastrophes. Finally, I said to myself, 'Well, you've bought the durn things, now fly 'em.'

"So I pointed her nose toward the ocean and give her the gun. It took off in about half the distance a 'Jenny' would and then for about three minutes I had the merriest time of my young life. The wings weren't assembled in perfect order, the entire plane was over-controlled, so that the lightest touch would start something. I went up and I went down. I looked down on the field and saw they had the ambulance out, so I headed out to the ocean.

MOTOR STALLS IN LOOP

"My instructor had told me that when you started to loop any ship to 'dive her till she squeals.' This is to gather speed to throw her around the loop.

"I went up to 8,000 feet, shoved my stick forward and started for the ground at 300 miles an hour. Then I pulled her and I mean to tell you she squealed. I held back on the stick. We started up and then she stalled. She came out but she was upside down and we dropped another 1,000 feet before I got her straightened out. We were 300 feet off the ground.

"I sold the last three of those 'Jennies' to Otto Muller, mayor, or 'El Presidente' of Calexio, just over the Mexican border from California. Then I went to work for him. He hired Paul Ryan, the designer of the Ryan monoplane, Jess Hart and me to fly the three ships on a barnstorming trip down into Mexico. Our eventual destination was Matanlan, 1,400 miles in the interior."

They flew to Yuma, Gala Bend, Tucson and Nogales, Ariz. When they crossed the border into Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, Ryan crashed in his plane. It was a total "washout" and Ryan left the party to return to the United States.

FUSELAGE BAYONETED

"Our next stop," Smitty said, eyeing a cup of coffee in his hand speculatively, "was Magalena, 150 miles in the interior. We landed and the Mayor came down to greet us. He spoke better English than we. He urged us to stay over and take the townspeople flying, and as we were paid $7.50, of 15 pesos, gold, by each passenger, we didn't object.

"Then a lieutenant came down from the fort and informed us that we were welcome to land for supplies, but that we couldn't fly over the fort. The Mayor fixed that up with the colonel and I flew to the fort to bring the colonel out to the field.

"The soldiers, it seemed, hadn't been informed that our visit was friendly. I landed on the parade ground inside the fort. Before the wheels quit rolling five soldiers, with fixed bayonets, ran out to the ship. One of them, who later claimed his foot slipped, rammed the bayonet through the fuselage. It went right under the seat of my trousers. Then the colonel came running out.

MAYOR TRIES AGAIN

"We had landed there about 9 o'clock in the morning. We took up passengers until 1, when the sun got so hot that the motors wouldn't lift the planes at all. The last trip I made I took up the mayor. I got off the field, but I couldn't get more than 300 feet. I tried to get back, but I knew I couldn't. So I headed for the only open spot I could see, a road right through the village. To get to it I had to land in the edge of a yard, and there was where I misjudged my distance. I had to drop over a roof of a 'dobe house and my tail-skid took a slice of the roof all the way across. That unbalanced me and we piled down on the wheels into the yard. Then the tail came down and we bumped on down the hill, tore down a fence and came to a stop in the road. But the mayor was game. I took him up again that afternoon when it turned cool.

Another time, when a young Mexican, graduated from the University of Southern California, was acting as Smitty's interpreter, they were forced to land by motor failure in a dry lake bottom about three miles from the railroad. While the interpreter went to look for a town or some human habitation along the railroad Smitty waited. Darkness came on and Smitty decided his companion had been "taken" by a cougar, many of which stalked through the desert vegetation in search of prey.

Smitty started out the trail to the railroad. Soon he came to a cross-trail, then another. He became lost in the maze of pathways. In the bushes alongside he heard the rustle of a soft-footed animal.

". . . All my hair stood up. Then I didn't hear anything. I walked along, half expecting each minute to have the cougar leap out of the brush at me. Then, to my horror, I saw that I had to pass through a clump of bush trees ahead. I had heard many tales of how the cougars will lie in the tree-tops until the victim passes underneath.

"THEN I SAW A COUGAR"

"I reached the bushes. I heard a rustle. I yelled as loud as I could. The next thing I realized was when I was half a mile away and still taking the ground in five-rod steps. Then ahead I saw a lantern and found the interpreter with a rescue squad."

A few days later the heat of the Mexican sun again stalled Smitty's motor, this time near a small village. He landed in the tops of the mesquite trees which covered the region. It took every man in the village two weeks to clear a runway 300 feet to the railroad where Smitty, his plane undamaged, even unscarred, in its tree-top landing, took off again.

Between Esperanzo and Navajo, a distance of 150 miles, Smitty's gas-line sprung a leak and suddenly he found himself in the desert, his partner flown on ahead. He landed in a salt flat. Then he walked two miles to a dry river-bed and dug down with his bare hands 6½ feet to water. He had no food.

"When darkness came," he said, lighting a story, "I built a fire near the ship. I could hear animals stalking about in the bushes. Then I saw a cougar standing in the edge of the brush. She circled around and around the ship, coming closer each time. I didn't have anything larger than a pen-knife. In an effort to frighten her away I jumped up and ran to the plane. My hand touched the stick and the aerolon at the end of the wing nearest her wiggled. She jumped back 50 feet. Then, all night long, as she came closer and closer, I frightened her away by shaking the stick. She couldn't understand it.

TRAINED 29 PILOTS

"I had no food, I was miles from a railroad and the only water I had was by walking to the river bed and digging into the sand with my hands. The only hope of relief I had was that Hart would come back for me. He did, but after I had spent three nights and two days out there all alone, with no food. The most welcome sound I've ever heard was when the drone of his motor awakened me on the third day."

Smitty came back to the states, played awhile in Texas and then bought more than a score of planes from the government. He spent an entire winter setting them up and at the end of a year had bought, traded and sold 37 airplanes. Last summer he came to Pittsburgh to work for the Mayer Aircraft Corporation. Since then, in addition to commercial, photographic and sightseeing flying, he has trained and "soloed" 29 pilots. In a big way he is holding up the best interests of flying and the highest traditions of Mayer Field which, in its nine years of operations, has flown in excess of 80,000 passengers without so much as scratching one. C. P. Mayer, by the way, owner of the corporation, is one of Pittsburgh's real pioneers of aviation. And he didn't take it up until he was past 70 years. But you'd never suspect it to look at him.

Salesmen Feasted as Reward for Record Sales

IN CONTEST—Because they sold more used cars in January than in any previous month in the history of the Samson Motor Company, used car salesmen of that company were feasted by executives in the Rittenhouse. The salesmen will again be guests of the officers at dinner this month, if they again exceed their quota, but will be hosts to the officers if they fail. Hosts at the dinner were Harry G. Samson, president; K. R. Spencer, Chrysler district supervisor; Howard Samson, treasurer; B. V. Kwait, auditor; J. C. Clawson, advertising manager, and L. C. Wesley Orr, used car manager.

Detroit Will Conduct Aircraft Exposition

DETROIT, Feb. 11.—America's aircraft industry, rising from infancy to a figure of world importance in the space of less than a quarter of a century, will endeavor to bring home to the people of the country the record of its spectacular progress by means of a national aircraft exposition to be held in this city April 14-21, inclusive.

The event is to be known as the All American Aircraft Show, and is sponsored by the Detroit Board of Commerce. It has the sanction of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, the national organization of aircraft manufacturers. Exhibition space is being allotted to members of the chamber and non-members on an equal basis.

IN CONVENTION HALL

Convention Hall, setting of numerous Detroit automobile shows and similar events of national importance, will house the All American. The hall has a floor space of 166,000 square feet.

Ray Cooper, known to the industry through his management of the national air tour for the Edsel B. Ford trophy, is manager of the show, with headquarters in the Detroit Board of Commerce offices. Working with him is John Harding, Jr., "Smiling Jack," engineering officer of the famous Army round-the-world flight of 1924. Harding has been sent to Detroit as representative of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Cooper recently completed a tour of the country, interviewing manufacturers of aircraft, parts and equipment. They received the prospect of a national show with such favor, says Cooper, that the success of the show is practically guaranteed.

FORD PORT OPEN

The Ford airport will be open to exhibitors during the period of the show. It may be used for demonstration purposes, or as a landing field for exhibitors who fly their craft here.

The educational exhibit will present a story of progress, ranging some of the earliest airplanes alongside the finished products of today. An exhibit has been promised by the Army Air Corps. It will be under military guard. Negotiations are in progress which are expected to bring historic attractions of the Wright Brothers, Commander Byrd's Polar cruiser also is promised.

In answer to a great national demand for a New WILLYS-KNIGHT SIX for only $1145

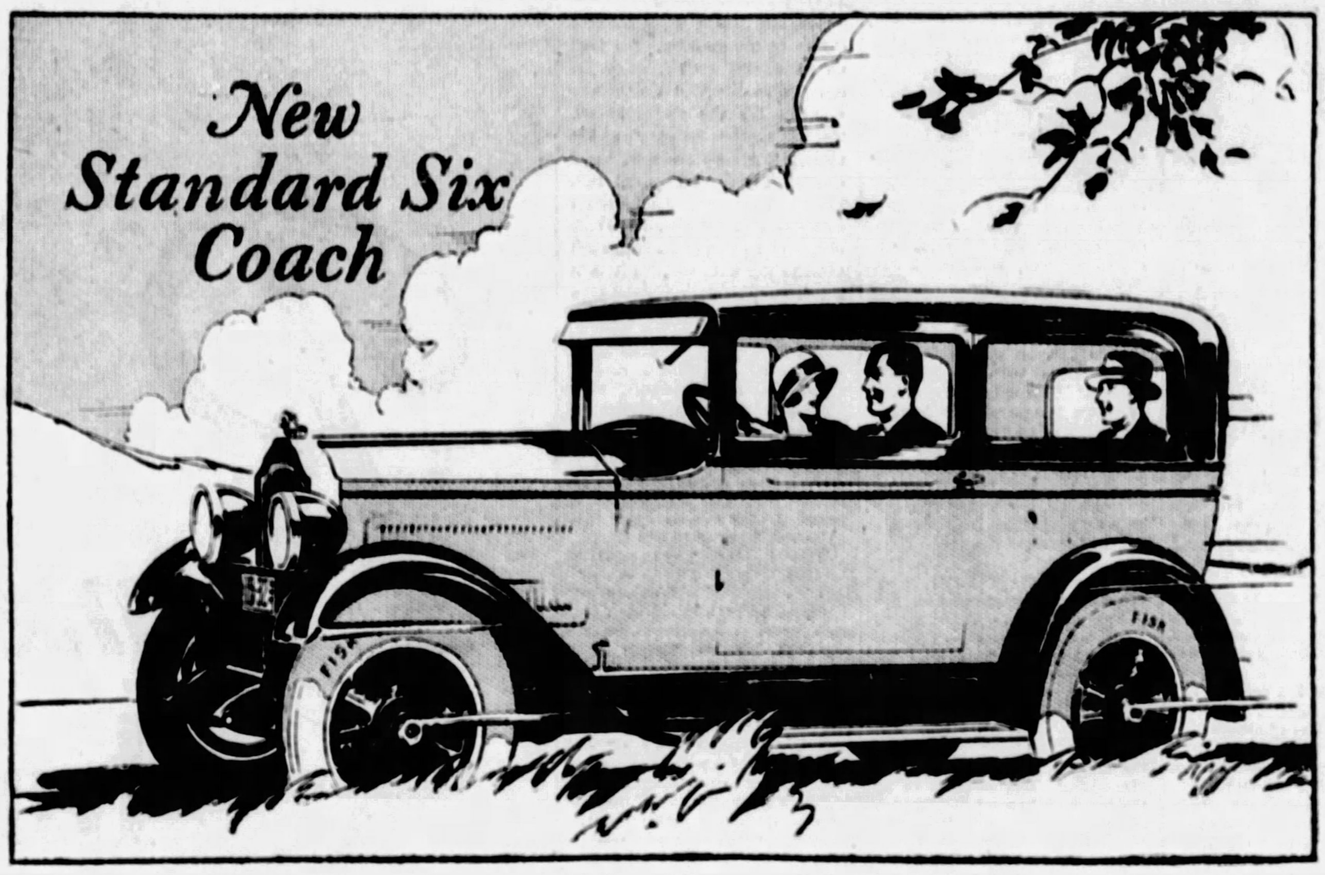
F. O. B. FACTORY



Important Advantages of the New Willys-Knight Standard Six

Patented high compression sleeve-valve engine: 45 horsepower
Positive, mechanical-type 4-wheel brakes
Narrow body posts at windshield for clear vision
8 Timken bearings in front axle for easiest steering
Roomy, comfortable interiors
Wide, deeply cushioned form-fitting seats
Light control for dimming, on toe board at left
Adjustable steering wheel on all models
Adjustable front seat on Sedan
Better ventilation—extra large cowl ventilator, and a windshield that opens exceptionally wide Remote controls on doors, convenient to the hand
Thermostat—air cleaner—oil rectifier

High Compression with any gas!

The simplicity of the patented Willys-Knight engine is responsible for its remarkable efficiency. Two metal sleeves in each cylinder move smoothly, silently, up and down, one within the other, in a protective film of oil. They admit and expel gas through openings in their sides. There is no complicated valve mechanism with springs, tappets and cams. These sleeves combine with the spherical cylinder head to form a completely sealed combustion chamber. This head directs the full force of the explosion straight downward against the piston, making the most efficient use of the highly compressed gas. Such carbon as forms serves only to seal the chamber even more perfectly. As a result, the Willys-Knight engine gives high uniform compression at all times, at all speeds—and with any gas.

THE acclaim which is greeting the new Willys-Knight Standard Six definitely proves how widespread has been the demand for a low-priced Six powered by the patented Willys-Knight engine.

It has long been our aim to produce just such a car. But due to the greater cost of building the superior sleeve-valve motor, it is only today—after fourteen years of experiment and progress—that we have reached our goal.

Thousands more may now drive the Willys-Knight, the car which is praised so enthusiastically by its present owners. Thousands more may now enjoy its silent power, velvet smoothness, simple design, quick starting, rigid economy. The new Standard Six is notable for the same flashing activity, sustained brilliance, ease of control, freedom from carbon troubles and repairs.

With features of costly cars

Many features of the Standard Six you would expect only at higher cost. The engine is 45-horsepower, with thermostat, air cleaner and oil rectifier. Eight Timken bearings in the front axle insure easiest steering. Interiors are spacious and tastefully appointed, with deeply cushioned form-fitting seats and remote controls on doors, readily convenient to the hand. The steering wheel is adjustable to the driver's individual comfort. Positive, mechanical-type four-wheel brakes are provided—considered by leading engineers the most dependable kind. Perfect ventilation obtains from a windshield that opens exceptionally wide and an extra large cowl ventilator.

Two other favorite Sixes

Willys-Knight Special Six—improved, finer; now still further distinguished by such advanced features as crown fenders, window reveals, steel-rimmed roof and beautiful new color options.

Willys-Knight Great Six—taking front rank with America's most luxurious cars. Now a larger, more powerful engine insures even higher and smoother speed and even flashier acceleration.

Willys-Knight Sixes range in price from $1145 to $2695, in the Standard Six, Special Six and Great Six divisions. Prices f. o. b. factory and specifications subject to change without notice. Willys-Overland, Inc., Toledo, Ohio.

'WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS'

MYSTERIES OF LIFE, LOVE AND SEX ARE EXPLAINED BY A MASTER OF SCIENCE

"During Our Pre-Natal Days We Live Fast; in a Few Days We Have Developed Structures That Were Evolved Only After Tens of Millions of Years," Says Dr. Dorsey.

In the preface of his masterful work, "Why We Behave Like Human Beings," Dr. George A. Dorsey says in part:

HUMAN beings are the most interesting objects on earth, and to know themselves and get along with one another is their most important business. That business drags because they do not know where they come from, how they got here, what they bring with them, what they do with it, and what they could do if they stopped quarreling among themselves and used their brains to solve their common problems.

It will speed up when the raw material of human nature and the possibilities of intelligent behavior are more generally understood. The facts for such an understanding are known, but they belong to several sciences and are scattered through many libraries.

To pick them out, put them in order and make them tell a complete and up-to-date story that can be held in one hand and read without a dictionary is the object of "Why We Behave Like Human Beings."

"Complete" is a large word, and must be taken with a grain of salt. Nothing is really complete in this world of ceaseless change and expanding horizon. The earth itself is not the earth it used to be when I first went to school. Man's story will be complete when there is no human being left to tell the tale.

By "complete" I mean comprehensive. This is the most comprehensive account of human beings that I know of. It is as up-to-date as I can make it. It moves as fast as I can make it, and avoids blind alleys which lead nowhere. It does touch many problems not yet solved or only partially guessed at; its handling of such problems is as sound and sane as I can make it with the help of many friends.

This does not commit them for my errors of omission and commission, nor lessen my responsibility for statements of facts or inferences from facts and hypotheses, nor signify that they approve an anthropologist's use of their materials for his story.

In short, my attitude is that any science which holds itself aloof from life and nowhere comes in contact with human beings is barren for the purposes of my story; but that the scandalmongers of science who would fill their lamps at the expense of the guillible, and who illumine no path of life nor sustain any living germ, should be illuminated.

How the Span of Human Life Has Its Beginning

By GEORGE A. DORSEY, PH. D., LL. D.,

Eminent Scientist and Anthropologist and Author, Whose "Why We Behave Like Human Beings" Is One of the Most Acclaimed and Popular Books of the Day.

WE know of only three kinds of living beings: bacteria, plants, animals. All living beings have a physical body or structure made up of a few of the more common chemical elements. This body is called protoplasm, the stuff of all living things. Living protoplasm occurs only in units called cells. Every living being is or has been a cell. Cells are always small and generally cannot be seen except under the microscope.

Many animals consist of just one cell, and hence are called unicellular organisms. Yet that cell suffices for them to live; they eat, they excrete, they grow, they multiply; they obey all the laws of living organisms. For living purposes they are complete. Higher animals have bodies of many cells, and are called Metazoa to distinguish them from the Protozoa, or unicellular animals.

We are animals and belong to the Metazoa group. Our body consists of about twenty-six thousand billion cells. Each cell is alive and must be nourished or it dies.

The cells which make up our body are of different forms and shapes and, except the free floating cells carried by the blood, are united into different kinds of tissue to form the organs and systems of our body. But a section cut anywhere from the body—from bone, muscle, eye, tongue, skin, heart—would under the microscope be seen to consist of tiny cells, each a complete unit of protoplasm.

Beginning of Our Growth

Our body begins its individual growth and development as one cell, the germ-cell or fertilized ovum (egg). By fertilization, the ovum, an old cell, is stimulated to begin a new life; it is made young again. Being rejuvenated, it can grow, and grow old.

The germ-cells (female, or ova; male, or spermia) are readily distinguishable under the microscope. Ova are much larger and less active than spermia. The latter are very active and propel themselves by a whiplash tail. Both are complete living organisms and in their combined bodies carry immortality. In general features, size, structure, etc., human germ-cells closely resemble those of other mammals.

The human ovum was first discovered in 1827. Although it is the largest of the cells in the body, fifty thousand could be mailed across the continent for a two-cent stamp; one hundred could ride on an inch-long spider web.

In both sexes the germ-cells mature normally only from the beginning of puberty. The ova develop in little pockets or follicles of the ovaries. There are about 70,000 follicles at birth. By the eighth year there are less than 40,000; of these only about 200 develop into true Graafian follicles. One of these, containing a single ovum, matures each lunar month of life between puberty and the menopause. It escapes through the ruptured wall of the ovary and enters the Fallopian tube. For each mature ovum thus released each lunar month, the male develops about 850,000,000,000 spermia.

Tiny Sparks of Immortality

One spermium only enters into the body of the matured ovum, leaving its tail outside. The ovum is now fertilized. It divides into two cells; these two divide and become four, etc. In nine months one fertilized ovum has grown five million per cent and increased in volume one billion times; by maturity it will have increased in volume fifteen billion times.

After the fertilized ovum has by division become many thousands, certain cells under the microscope may be distinguished from the others. These are to become the germ-cells of new individuals, tiny sparks of immortality, endowed with the capacity to hand life on to the next generation.

The other cells of the tiny embryo are called soma, or body cells. They also grow and multiply by division and assume special shapes to fit them to form the tissues and organs of the body—nerves, eyes, bone, teeth, heart, muscles, blood, etc. Having specialized or become differentiated, they cannot unite with other cells to start new lives—they are not germ-cells.

We hear much of adaptations. Every living animal is "adapted" or it could not live. What it is adapted to and what it adapts itself with depend on the animal and the stage of its development. The tiny germ-cell in the hen's egg is adapted to an environment of yolk and albumin. It draws on these for its nourishment. The human ovum has no such store of food to draw upon. It is adapted to a different environment. For 280 days it is to live the life of a true parasite. It must therefore attach itself to a living wall, from which it can derive its supplies for living and for growth. These early adaptations of the human ovum are of great interest.

But the interest will be increased if we have before us a law of biology which says that individual development rehearses or recapitulates the life history of the species. This means that our individual prenatal and postnatal growth up to the time of adolescence is a resume of the evolution of the human race. It does not mean that at one stage of development the fetus is a fish or a reptile; it does say that the ovum develops along the road our ancestors traveled in becoming human.

We begin our individual existence as a protozoon or single-celled animal; not until the end of the third month has the fetus the essential parts of a fairly complete human being. During the last six months the fetus grows more human; the parts begin to mature, and for years after birth keep on maturing.

Develop From Own Body

The embryo begins at once to develop from its own body the two fetal membranes or envelopes. The inner one, or amnion (lamb) fills with a pint or more of water. In this the embryo floats, and consequently any pressure to which it is subjected becomes more evenly distributed. By a special growth called placenta (cake, because of its shape) of the outer membrane or chorion (skin), the embryo attaches itself to the wall of the uterus.

Through this placenta the parasite embryo derives food and oxygen. But it develops its own blood and its own circulatory and digestive systems; they are at all times quite distinct from its host's. She supplies what the chick embryo receives from the hen egg: support, protection, water, food, fuel, oxygen.

Both fetal membranes and placenta follow the child at birth. The child is freed from the placenta by severing its umbilical cord; our navel is the scar.

No one has yet seen a fertilized human ovum, nor has anyone yet seen a human embryo that had not already had 10 days' growth—and it measured about one one-hundredth of an inch in length. Even of the second week of human development almost nothing is definitely known, and of embryos of the third week the Carnegie Laboratory of Embryology has been able to assemble only 14 specimens. What actually goes on, then, during the first 18 days of man's intrauterine existence can as yet only be inferred from known facts of lower mammalian embryonic development.

All one-cell animals consist of an outside and "insides." Through their outside membrane or cell wall they keep in touch with the world. Our keep-in-touch-with-the-world mechanisms (skin, hair, nails, all skinglands and organs, lining of mouth, enamel of teeth, special sense organs, and entire nervous system) are all derived from the outside cells of the original hollow body when it caved in to bury certain cells inside the body. From those inside cells we develop "insides"-food and air canals. Muscles and skeleton, blood, sex organs, etc., did not appear until animal life had made much progress in evolution.

Evolution of Centuries

During our early prenatal days we live fast; we can be certain of that. In a few days we have developed structures that were evolved only after tens of millions of years.

Within two weeks the embryo has become a minute plate-like structure with a streak across it. By the third week this streak opens into the plate at both ends. One opening becomes the mouth. The cavity within the embryo will divide and become the thoracic and abdominal cavities.

Meanwhile, a series of lines appear, dividing the plate-like embryo into segments. Segmented animals, such as worms and insects, retain these segments; as do fishes in muscles, ribs, and vertebrae; as do we in our ribs, vertebrae, and the muscles between the ribs. Our floating ribs are simply incomplete ribs, but we have vestiges of ribs all the way down our spine. Those below the chest fuse with outgrowths from the vertebrae and are called lateral processes.

The vast majority of animals have no backbone, and are called Invertebrates. One of the greatest steps in evolution was a backbone or vertebral column. Three types were tried out before Vertebrates devloped a true backbone. All three types or stages appear in the developing human embryo. The notochord or permanent body axis of the lowest fishes appears early; later it is obliterated by the bodies of the vertebrae, but traces of the notochord may persist and lead to tumors in adult life. Our bony vertebrae proper are preceded by cartilage, the only backbone sharks have. This is replaced by bone.

JUDGE LINDSEY: 'Every Marriage Is Companionate Until It Brings Forth Children'

Interesting Facts About the Many Sided Dr. Dorsey

THE story of Dr. Dorsey's quest for knowledge reads like romance. For over thirty years he has devoted himself to the study of mankind.

In connection with expeditions organized by the Field Museum of Chicago and other scientific bodies he has traveled in Egypt, India, Burma, Malay, Java, Australia, New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, China, Japan, Peru, Mexico, Africa and Alaska.

For some years he held the position of Professor of Anthropology at the University of Chicago. As a delegate he has attended important scientific conventions in this country and abroad.

He was the first student enrolled in the Department of Archeology and Anthropology at Harvard and has won repeated honors by his brilliant achievements as a scientist. At present he lives in New York.

GEORGE A. DORSEY, PH. D., LL. D.,

Author of "Why We Behave Like Human Beings," Hailed by Scientists and Laymen Alike as One of the Outstanding Literary Achievements of the Age.

What Started the Author on His Famous Work

DR. DORSEY sums up his early environment as follows:

"My normal endowment of curiosity was encouraged by a mother who wanted to travel but couldn't, and stimulated by music of the telegraph wires in front of our house and the nightly arrival of the huge Concord mail coach-and-six from Columbus on its way to Zanesville.

"My town, Kirkersville, was half-way between, on the old National Pike, then the best-known highway in Ohio. It had toll gates and imposing mile-stones, and crossed our Bloody Run 'Crick' by a covered bridge which to me in those barefoot days was about the biggest thing in the world.

"School days meant geography—wonderful colored maps and pictures of strange animals and peoples. I had a conviction that I was to see all those animals and peoples. My life has been spent in realizing that conviction."

'LET YOUNG FOLK WED EARLY AND UNDERTAKE PARENTHOOD WHEN THEY'RE READY FOR IT'

"Divorce Should Be Granted by Mutual Consent to Childless Couples, Where All Efforts at Reconciliation Have Failed, and Usually Without the Payment of Alimony."

By BEN B. LINDSEY,

Former Judge of the Children's Court in Denver, Famous Authority on Domestic Relations and Their Derangements, Whose Book on Companionate Marriage First Projected the Proposal Into the Realm of Nation-Wide Public Discussion.

EVERY marriage is a Companionate till it brings forth children. The fact that all conventional marriages begin as Companionates is not generally understood by persons who think themselves violently opposed to Companionate Marriage.

I recently read in a newspaper, for instance, of some young couple who were getting married. When asked by the reporter whether theirs was to be a Companionate Marriage, they put on expressions of virtuous horror and said no, that they were going to have "an old-fashioned marriage." And they did. They became Companionates the minute the minister pronounced them man and wife. And, since only a few months have elapsed, I trust, for the sake of their reputation and social comfort, that they still are.

Another way of putting it would be to say, after the manner of Julius Caesar, that all normal marriage is divided into three parts, one of which the Companionates inhabit, a second the Family, and the third those who, in their own language are called merely "married," but in the language of this day are Second Companionates, childless once more.

Fruitage of Successful Wedlock

In every conventional marriage there comes first a childless, Companionate period of a year, more or less. This childless, or Companionate period passes, with the advent of children, into the Family; and it remains a Family Marriage till the brood leaves the nest. Then the union becomes childless once more; the husband and wife are alone again, as in their first year; and they continue in this Second Companionate till the end of the chapter. Such is the normal course of a successful marriage.

That Second Companionate is like the first, and yet it is different. It is richer in meaning, in wisdom, in tolerance, in understanding, and in love. The wine of life has aged and mellowed now; and in the Second Companionate there is a joy and satisfaction seldom known in the earlier and more tempestuous years of married life.

This is the crown, the spiritual period, the true fruitage of successful wedlock. All things, both the physical and the spiritual, have their due place in it. The early tensions caused by the need for adjustment between two lives have given way to something less agonizingly taut. Comfort, peace and ease are now possible. It isn't the first year that's the hardest; it's the first two periods.

I am not at all cynical about marriage; but there can be no question that it is disciplinary. That is why it has always been an acute social problem and always will be so.

Marriage as an Art

Marriage is an art; there is therefore no way to make it easy, for every art is, ipso facto, difficult. But if marriage is difficult because it is an art, it is also worth while for the same reason. Like any other vital art, marriage yields peculiar satisfactions to those who can master it.

To learn to play a violin is difficult, but the master violinist has found him a road to Paradise which he can take at any moment.

To learn to draw harmonies from another personality is difficult, but from such harmonies, when they can be created, come some of the deepest satisfaction of life.

The more complete the union that one can attain with another personality, the more vividly does that other personality stand out in one's mind as an object, the object of one's regard, distinct and separate from oneself. Hence, the more complete the union the more complete becomes the consciousness of one's own individual personality as a thing apart from the loved object.

This is one of the deep paradoxes of life: "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted," "he that loseth his life shall find it," he that loses himself in union with another's life shall find himself more vividly an individual than he was before.

This is true in the practice of every art. But marriage, being an art which is in universal practice, brings this amazing opportunity for growth within reach of the average man and woman. We cannot all be great violinists or great painters, or great writers, or great sculptors. Only a few have the gifts necessary to the exercise of these arts.

The Art of Love

But, up to the measure of their abilities, average persons can, in marriage, practice the art of love in the widest and biggest sense in which the word "love" can be used. That is my notion of what marriage may mean to those who measure up to its admittedly austere requirements.

One of the most necessary things in the practice of any art, be it marriage or what you will, is effort; and another extremely necessary thing is intelligence.

You will find effort in nearly all marriages, but you will find intelligence in only a few of them. And this is particularly true with respect to the First Companionate, which we all enter when we marry.

What I propose is that we inject a little intelligence into the use we make of it.

"WOMAN AS GOOD TODAY AS EVER"

Theodore Dreiser Analyzes Rebellion of Modern Girl and Defends Her

"The Home Is Still Held Together by Love," He Says

By THEODORE DREISER,
Distinguished Novelist Who Wrote "An American Tragedy."

I AM sure it is the widening mind-power of people the world over that is responsible for the great unrest in so many fields. So much new and amazing information is being forced upon the gray matter of man! His five senses are constantly being put to new and increasing strains.

From somewhere, like a breath of fresh air, has come not only an impulse to create but to solve. People are asking more and more insistently what it (Life) is all about; whether it has a meaning or a purpose; and answering themselves variously. Of course, some seem to think it is for pleasure only; others, a necessary and too often bitter preparation for a possible existence elsewhere.

You hear of "old souls;" of the mystery and inexplicability of "genius;" of personalities who, like Edison, Shaw, Wagner, Einstein, appear to be qualified for special tasks before even they arrive on earth. And, again, of thousands and thousands who come and go with the minds of children; who neither see, no hear, nor grasp, nor do anything of any import—have no equipment for so doing.

At the same time, there is this mysterious division of the sexes, by which life—or if not life, then man, at least, as an expression of a form of life—keeps itself going. And out of that division, as he is almost too ready to believe, comes all of his happiness.

True, he may, or must, struggle to do this or that, keep his body provisioned and his senses intact. And in that struggle—and if his sensual endowment is not too great—he may readily lose himself, mistaking wealth, or the name of it, invention, or the name for that, or power, or the name for that, as a sufficient answer to all, or at least most, of his desires.

But if so, he is the exception. And there are not so many who will even believe he exists. They—or at least those who feel deeply and deepest the sensual or sex urge—will be inclined to agree with Freud that energy in all forms, all outflowings of art as well as of practicality or utility, are traceable to but one source—the desire of the life force for happiness, via its principal mechanism, sex.

But whether we agree with that or not (and for the purpose that is here in hand we may let it rest), it is at least debatable whether or not such things as houses — and hence lumber companies and iron foundries, bathtub, wall paper and other industries—food, transportation, and communication organizations — owe their existence and vitality and validity to the sex impulse, its driving urge and colorful fulfilment. But whether they do or not (and let the philosophers now assemble and decide), the spectacle that the sex impulse, as represented by men and women the world over today, sets forth is one worthy of comment.

Whence This Change?

"Rebellious Women and Marriage," "Rebellious Men and Marriage," "Varietism," "Divorce," the "Single" and "Double" standards of morality, "Trial Marriage," "Companionate Marriage," "Free Love," "The Decaying Home," "Our Decaying Institutions," "Polygamy," "Polyandry," "Mormonism" — have you failed to notice these as headlines to news stories and articles in magazines, plays and pictures in the theaters, subjects for sermons in churches or lectures in halls? Does not each one of these indicate the import of the discussion in hand?

To what end? Or, better yet, for what reason? Why all the excitement, unless because where there is so much smoke there must be some fire? We are seriously urged to believe that in all history, never, never, never was there anything quite the equal of what is going on now.

Well, right here and now, let us dismiss history. Let no one who is subject to shock with regard to the sexes and their doings venture to look back. Much better to confine ourselves to the present, and assume that within the last 20 years or so there has been a great change for the worse from previous higher standards in the world's sex relations; that before that time, things were ever so much better and, indeed, all right.

Then we can get to the place where we talk of the world's sex relations as they stand now, and better yet, draw some conclusions that we can grasp and the validity of which we can either pleasantly refute or agree with.

Reasons for Change

First, however, this is the place to consider, I think, the reasons offered for this swift and dreadful change. One of the first, if I recall aright—and that was many years ago—is that with the introduction of the factory and wage system in England sometime early in the last century or toward the close of the one preceding it (the eighteenth), woman was taken—or driven, as you will—from the home, her up-to-then assumed legitimate and "higher" place in the scheme of things, out into the factory, the shop, the office, and so a bread winner. Whether she was entirely in the home before then, and whether that fact had any appreciable effect upon her morals of her state of mind, I would not venture to say here. I do not know.

But as a boy, in the newspapers and magazines of the United States, even in some of its churches, I often heard that the factory, office, store—indeed, the wage system in its entirety—was more or less responsible for a slow but sure deterioration in the morals, and, perhaps worse yet, the mental acquiescence of women. Woman was no longer so docile or obedient as she had been. She was getting notions as to her "rights."

Fruits of Agitation

There were whispers of "votes for women"—a most outrageous development, as most of us remember. Coincidentally, there were Dr. Mary Walker, Susan B. Anthony and Carrie Chapman Catt. (Anybody here remember Dr. Mary Walker, with her trousers, frock coat, high silk hat and gold-headed cane? At least I, for one, recall reading of her.)

And always, in my day, given as one of the evidences of, as well as the reasons for, the moral deterioration of women, was this enormous agitation for her rights. Yet, to those who most desired her to have her rights, she was still a slave, a chattel, occupying relatively the same position legally as an idiot! Her husband (and in the United States, if you please!) was her master.

But hearken! She was to be brought out of all this, properly educated and given the vote, and forthwith there was to be equal pay for equal work. Not only that, but given the same legal or official standing as her lord and master (under the American Constitution, at least), she was to share with him, fifty-fifty, in the control of their government; be alderman, judge, governor, congressman or President. Furthermore (but, of course, all this was looking into the future at that time), she was to be an influence for good.

There was to be an end to crime—or nearly so—and all phases of evil in politics. For, and although, because of this current agitation, she was slowly and surely deteriorating morally and in every other way, still, once she had the vote or her "rights" (all the fruits of this agitation), she was to prove a great and sanifying influence, an uplifting and beneficent force. No more graft, no more vile politics, no more prostitution, white slavery, child labor, saloons, liquor!

Given Many Rights

Well, she obtained the vote and now holds office. We have women members of Congress, judges, commissioners, department heads, and women are in every factory, shop and office in the land. What is the result? Child slavery, it is true, has gone, in part. The demon rum has—legally, if not actually—departed.

As for white slavery, it is true that we have the Mann act, and, of course, the "red light districts" have legally been outlawed, although temperamentally the world seems still to "white slave" and to congregate in evil or sex "palaces" into the bargain. And as for the end of bribery or "graft," or the vileness of politics the newspapers are rarely free from the necessity of reporting the glaring details of a sensational exposure of some public office-holder who has used unethical and unlawful methods of acquiring money or power.

In connection with all this — women's purifying and ennobling influence in so many directions—the preachers, the moralists, and the conservatives of that day and since seem at the same time to have been, and still are, of the firm conviction that her morals were, and still are, steadily deteriorating! They cite, for instance, that dreadful change in fashions, which came, if I recall aright, some 20 years ago, and which may be symbolized by the shortened skirt and the peach-basket hat.

Conditions Not So Bad

Up, up, up went the skirt, from then on, from the shoe-top to the knee. And down, down, down, for a summer at least, went the hat. You were lucky in 1925 if you caught sight of one eye! (But then, of course, there were the legs.)

And along with that, if you will believe it, the most urgent desire on the part of all women to wear less and less at the beaches! Oh, those first days, when the bathing suit, with its accompanying stockings, began to grow shorter and colors (lurid and provocative) began to apear, until at last, and as early as 1911-12, the one-piece bathing suit (if only in conservative black) began to threaten!

The world! The world! What was it coming to? Sin, sin, sin! Was there no end to, or escape from, the machinations of the devil, or Eros, or Pan? What were parents thinking of? Where were the good old standards, anyhow? Should not the law intervene? Page Anthony Comstock! Hurry forward with the Watch and Ward Society! Bring up the Boy Scouts!

And all this was done. With, as a result, spectacle after spectacle of arrests, threats, denunciations! And still the one-piece suit and the bright colors at the beaches marching steadily on, until now . . .!!

And then the war, of course. What has not been blamed on the Great War? The present-day deterioration of women and their morals, for one thing! And wholly and completely laid to it by some. Do any of you recall the hue and cry with regard to "war babies?" (The play of the same name, with its mushy palliation of the situation out of which the war baby arose.) It was right, and yet, somehow, it was wrong. But still it might be done . . . for one's country.

AN interesting pose of Theodore Dreiser, one of America's foremost novelists, who wrote "An American Tragedy," and many other famous works.

"WE ARE seriously urged to believe that in all history never was there anything quite the equal of what is now going on."

Who Cause Complaint?

Gone are all the old ankle-low restraints and inhibitions of dress. Enter Freud, the beauty contest, the gaily-colored one-piece bathing suit, trial marriage, companionate marriage, "Peaches" Browning, the night club, the "glorification" of the American girl, and, of course, divorce and crime as never before.

And what is to be done about it? How overcome the restlessness of the American woman, or womankind in general? How bring her back to the fold of righteousness; stop her from flirting and carousing; make her realize not only the import but the dignity of her place in life; cause her, indeed, to cling to one man, the home, children, the church, and to work, and even slave, for a purer and cleaner nation, with all that that implies?

I do not know. I have no solution of the problem. But I have a few comments to make.

One of these is that, essentially women are no worse than they ever were. Examine the histories of different times and countries and see for yourself. The temperaments of men and women have not essentially changed since history began to be written, and they are not likely to change under our very eyes.

One man can still love one woman. If you don't believe it, look around you. And one woman can still love one man, and does. If you've tried to win one away from him, you know.

Home Life Prevails

Furthermore, the wide American scene, to speak of no other, is not literally dotted with homes in which unrest and unfaithfulness and immorality reign. A great many are held together by one man and one woman who desire to be together and who would not willingly, and for reason of genuine love, do anything to cast a shadow upon the peace and comfort of said home.

Again, a large number more are people who, for reasons connected with religious or moral dogma, social or conventional beliefs, love of their children, hope of business prosperity or fear of business losses, are held in close leash to such communal ideas of morality and good faith as may be. The rest, in part or as a whole (who can really say?) confronts us with the spectacle of which the moralists and religionists (and not only these but also many individuals of only a conservative turn) now complain.

These are the ones who flock to the night clubs, throng the divorce courts, wear the most daring one-piece bathing suits, patronize the exotic resorts and couturiers of Europe and America, and generally disport themselves in such a fashion as, if you will believe the conventionalists and the religionists, to bring shame and scandal on us all.

JUDGE LINDSEY UPHOLDS COMPANIONATE MARRIAGE

It is difficult for me to understand why this proposal should be regarded as sensational or why licentious implications should have been read into it.

What I want is that men and women should understand the value of the First Companionate and avail themselves of its perfectly legitimate and respectable possibilities; and I propose certain changes in our laws to make this legally possible, and to place the fully developed socially recognized Companionate within the reach of all.

The companionate, rightly regarded, is the most effective possible preparation for family marriage. It lays a foundation for it and insures its success. It affords a much needed opportunity for the husband and wife to become adjusted to each other before they undertake the responsibility of children; it gives them time to establish a sound economic basis for their life together; and it affords an opportunity, if they are really incompatible, and really unable to make a go of marriage, to find out the fact before children arrive to complicate the situation.

"Hypocrisy of Pretense"

Thus the companionate, intelligently made use of, becomes a stabilizing agent in marriage, and an insurance against the widespread failure in family marriage which is causing so much concern these days.

Many childless couples are denouncing me violently for my advocacy of the companionate union which they are themselves practicing. I can only conclude from this that what they really object to is not the companionate unions in which they are living, but rather having marriage as they practice it candidly analyzed.

They don't like the suggestion that we all drop hypocrisy and pretense in this matter, and legalize a practice which the most moral and conservative among us are following as a matter of course.

They think bootleg birth control is somehow all right, but that legalized birth control would be immoral. They think that divorce obtained through the illegal collusion and perjured evidence is perfectly proper, but that divorce honestly granted because two persons agree that they can't be happy together would be "destroying the foundations of the home."

Thousands and thousands of couples get married every year in spite of their realization of the fact that they are in no position to support a family. Why do they do it? How do they reason it out? Why they decide they will put off the coming of children till later. They are a bit vague about it. They know that they can find help of a kind at the corner drug store, and that the whole project, while illegal, is quite possible. They enter marriage on that basis.

"Secrcy and Ignorance"

But unfortunately the bootleg methods of contraception which they obtain from the drug store are not always adequate to meet their need, and some of them are injurious. The whole matter is wrapped in the fogs of secrecy and ignorance. They take their chance with methods that are unscientific and often dangerous, and the chances of unwanted pregnancy, with a complete upset of all their calculations and plans, is the result.

I have seen this happen in scores and hundreds of cases. That is not what I would call making an intelligent use of the companionate period of marriage. I would call in the aid of science, and I would help these young people to carry out their perfectly proper wish to marry when they fall in love, and to have a family as soon as they can afford it.

Birth control has become an absolute necessity in our civilization. If we do not practice is scientifically and rationally then we shall have to practice it irrationally, as mankind always has, by means of abortion, war for the decimation of population, late marriages and the like.

In one way or another some control of the birth rate is necessary, and historically war, abortion and theological commands to celibacy have been among the accepted means to it. Scientific birth control would be better than these.

Not long ago a certain young couple got married with the announced intention of remaining childless till they were ready for a family. Since they were both of them students, their parents agreed to support them, as hitherto—and not require them to delay their marriage.

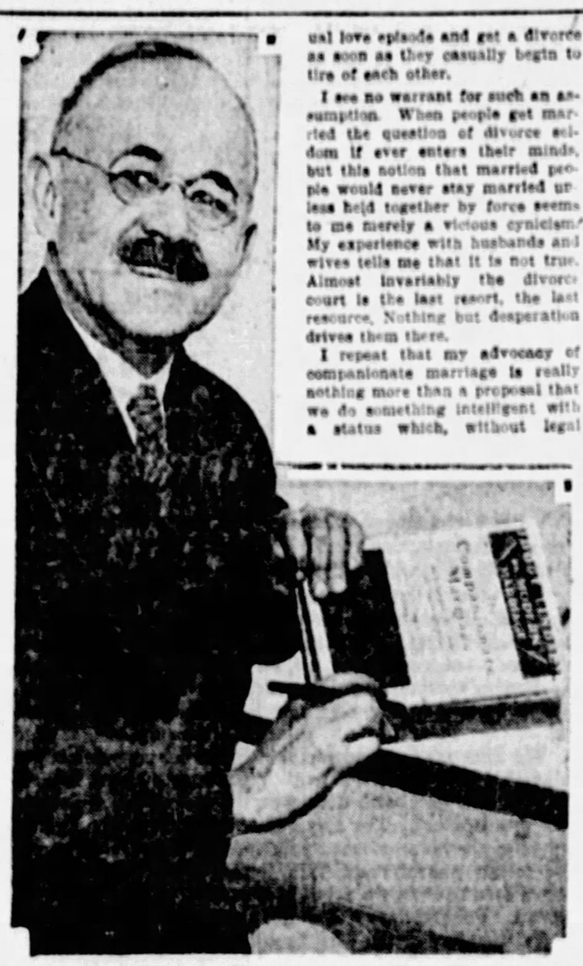
Tremendous Hullabaloo

Among our universities there are many students who make such marriages. It has been happening for years. It is especially common in co-educational institutions, where the number of married students is constantly increasing.

In some cases the parents contribute to the support of the couple; in others they have money which they have saved or inherited. At all events, they work out their economic problem according to their circumstances and resources, and carry on their university work till they are through and ready for whatever they propose to do later.

This enables them to avoid the protracted wait of a long engagement. They are happier, healthier and more normal married; and the general testimony of university authorities is that such students do better work and are more steady than those who are struggling with the problem of sex under conditions that allow it no socially sanctioned satisfaction. As I say, such marriages have been taking place for years, in and out of our colleges, without the slightest objection from anybody.

But the frank young couple of whom I am telling were so incautious as to call their marriage by its right name. They said it was going to be a companionate. The result was a tremendous hullaboo which at this writing is just beginning to die down. It was all right till they spoke out in meeting and said: "This is companionate marriage."



A STRIKING pose of Judge Ben B. Lindsey, former judge of the Children's Court of Denver. He won world-wide fame by his humane methods of handling cases of juvenile delinquency. He is a firm believer in companionate marriages and sets forth his views in the accompanying article.

Some criticized the marriage on the ground that it carried no heavy family responsibilities with it. What of that? It will carry the usual responsibilities later, and since by that time the couple will have oriented themselves in some of the first principles of marriage, the chances are that they will carry those responsibilities to better purpose than if they had waited another five years before marrying.

We have a profound belief in this country that anything that is pleasant must somehow be sinful; and that a marriage that does not immediately take on a back-breaking load of "responsibility" must necessarily be licentious.

"A Vicious Cynicism"

Another criticism against the marriage was that the couple said they expected to get of a divorce if they could not make a success of their life together. Well, lots of people are doing that. I think what the critics fear is that the couple will make marriage a one-act love episode and get a divorce as soon as they casually begin to tire of each other.

I see no warrant for such an assumption. When people get married the question of divorce seldom if ever enters their minds, but this notion that married people would never stay married unless held together by force seems to me merely a vicious cynicism. My experience with husbands and wives tells me that it is not true. Almost invariably the divorce court is the last resort, the last resource. Nothing but desperation drives them there.

I repeat that my advocacy of companionate marriage is really nothing more than a proposal that we do something intelligent with a status which, without legal sanction, already exists. It is, in short, a proposal that we legalize birth control, and that we grant divorce by mutual consent to childless couples, usually without payment of alimony.

Note that that does not mean easy divorce. It means divorce granted because the couple want it, but granted only after experts in this field have failed in all efforts to bring the couple together.

The Natural Thing

It is obvious that such divorce could more readily be granted to childless couples than to those with children; that the two kinds of divorce are different, and that the one is socially more significant than the other. This idea never kicked up much excitement till I began calling things by their right names, and making such distinctions. That made it immoral.

So far as the practice of birth control by the newly married is concerned, it seems to me that they should be the judges as to how long they should defer the conception of children, and that the matter is no concern of the busybodies who would force them, by legalized ignorance of birth control, into adding to the population whether they are ready to do so or not. Most normal persons want children and, if given birth control, will have them in their own good time and will be the better fitted to rear them.

Such is the program for rationalized Companionate Marriage. Many sincere and open-minded persons are convinced that it is a dangerous program. They think it dangerous in that it would permit of earlier marriages than are now customary under our present industrial civilization.

Before the age of machinery people used to marry young. But today few men can manage to marry before they are twenty-five. Men entering the professions often have to wait even longer—often till thirty or even thirty-five. They are not making enough money before that time to support a family.

I don't see how anybody who understands the terrific social disorders that result from this condition can object to anything that promises effectively to alleviate it. Society demands celibacy of people who are at the mating age. That was never true in primitive society, but it is true now.

Vice, crime, perversions, promiscuity and venereal disease are increased by any condition that defers marriage unduly beyond the maturing of the reproductive function in young men and young women. Early marriage is the NATURAL thing. Generally speaking, it should be possible for young people to marry in their early twenties. To delay the marriage of thousands and thousands of our young people for many years beyond that time, as we are now doing, is not reasonable. Moreover, it is dangerous.

'Thousands Are Doing It'

Since our industrial system makes early family marriage no longer practicable, we should have early companionate marriages under conditions that would make accidental pregnancy improbable or impossible. In other words, we should lengthen the duration of that already established thing in marriage, the first companionate.

Instead of having the traditional year to run, it should have several years to run, if the couple so desired, and those years should run backward rather than forward.

Let them marry early, instead of at 25 or 30, and then let them continue to have their children at the age at which they have them now.

Here is a typical case: Joe and Sadie, aged 21 and 18, respectively, want to marry. Joe is making $20 a week an' Sadie is making $25. Or she may be making as much or more than Joe.

If they marry in the traditional way, Sadie gives up her work, and they both try to live on Joe's $20 a week, and they are supposed to go right ahead and have a family on that basis. Either that, or WAIT.

If these young people could both go on working and could be sure of having no children till they were ready for them, there isn't a sensible reason that can be advanced why they should not marry forthwith. It will be better for them, and it will enable them to be laying a foundation for their life-long union.

The answer to those who deny that this is feasible is that thousands of young people are doing it, and doing it successfully. They don't have to be held together by the immediate presence of children and the responsibility which that involves. They stick without it and they look forward to a family later on.

The Path to Divorce

At last comes the time when Sadie can drop her job and do the thing she really wants to do, and THIS is the time when, if they had followed the advice of our worshipers of tradition, they would have been GETTING MARRIED.

Contrast the two conditions. Under their companionate they have had a chance to adjust their little peculiarities. If Sadie leaves the cap off the tooth paste, or Joe can't be broken of the habit of putting his shoes under the bed instead of in the closet, they have had time to fight it out. And if they can't agree on such things, and on matters of graver import, they find it out before they have a baby to complicate the situation.

They enter parenthood with their eyes open, and the chances are that, so prepared by a few years of contact with each other, they will raise a fine, happy family, and that they will never approach a divorce court.

Under the plan of deferred marriage, on the other hand, they would have no such orientation. Nobody can fortell the outcome without such orientation. I have seen thousands of cases of both kinds, and I know from observation which is the more likely to wind up with a divorce.

Nothing more certainly tends to disrupt a marriage and introduce discord into a home than the advent of children when severe poverty rules the roost, and when the couple have not yet had time to adjust their love life on a basis of mutual understanding and fairly long experience.

One reason for this is that most couples go into marriage ignorant of sex and ignorant of each other. It should be possible to extend the companionate period long enough for the couple to acquire a stock of wisdom that will carry them through.

For this, and for many other reasons, the first companionate should be consciously and deliberately utilized by married couples in general for making their marriage safe, both for children and for themselves.

It is a matchless opportunity to lay foundations that will be wide and firm. Let them take it. And if they find they can't lay such a foundation they can go their ways without wrecking the lives of helpless children.

If, on the other hand, those first efforts to enter into each other's lives are a success, they can go forward in the faith that they have found the greatest thing in life.

PROF. JEROME DAVIS REVEALS

'HOW JAPAN IS PEACEFULLY ACQUIRING RICH CONCESSIONS FROM SOVIET RUSSIA'

"Nipponese Statesmen Engineering Economic Penetration of Communist Domain in Far East."

"U. S. Government Is Hopelessly in Dark Regarding Strategic Moves of Japanese."

IN VIEW of the present activity of the United States Government regarding proposed loans to Soviet Russia by American bankers, the accompanying article by Professor Jerome Davis, of Yale University, is specially interesting and illuminating. Professor Davis took a post-graduate course in Russia after graduating from Yale and speaks Russian fluently.

Two years ago he toured Soviet Russia carrying letters from Senator Borah requesting Soviet officials to give him every opportunity to ascertain the real status of Russian affairs under communism. Recently he made another trip to Russia, accompanying a delegation of American labor unionists, to make a supplementary study of conditions there.

By JEROME DAVIS,
Professor of Economics, Yale University.

JAPAN has strong military leaders as well as a powerful economic group who are casting longing eyes toward Russia. Baron Tanaka, who became Premier in April, 1927, was formerly Minister of War in three cabinets. He is definitely opposed to the "friendship policy" of his predecessors. He looks forward to relationships with both China and Russia which may call for the threat of "a mailed fist."

It was Premier Tanaka who last summer removed the head of the South Manchurian Railway and appointed J. Yamamato, a military follower, in his place. Yamamato declared that "the railway had a more important mission than a merely economic one."

Japanese Economic Penetration

Russia believes this means the eventual annexation of Manchuria. The Manchurian loan, which J. P. Morgan & Co. now have under consideration, is partially for the extension of the Southern Manchurian Railway, which is operated and guaranteed by the Japanese government. Russia considers that if this loan goes through, America will be aiding Japanese imperialism.

Meanwhile, the Japanese are feverishly building railways in Manchuria. There is the Northern System and the South Manchurian Railroad. Fifty miles of territory on either side of this railroad were to be crossed by no other line without its permission.

Japan cleverly overcame the infringement by proposing to Russia that they build the railway together. At the same time Japan declared she stood ready to do it alone if Russia (who was almost bankrupt) did not care to join.

This line is now practically completed and taps one of the richest areas in northeastern Asia. Another line which Japan is building runs from Kirin eastward to the coast, and other vertical lines are planned.

It should be remembered that by the treaty of 1924 Russia and China jointly control the Chinese Eastern Railway. The United States protested part of the treaty on the ground that adequate provision had not been made for foreign creditors, but China, backed by Russia for the first time, bluntly dared to speak her mind:

"In the future the two governments of China and Russia will deal with the Chinese Eastern Railway, in which only the two countries of Russia and China are concerned."

At present Japan is slowly settling Chinese Manchuria at the rate of several thousand a month. On the other hand, the Japanese economic group is going ahead with peaceful economic penetration in Russia. Only this past year they have secured valuable concessions in timber, gold and other natural resources.

"Russo-Jap War Remote"

Because of long residence in Japan I had the opportunity to visit the Japanese concessionaires in Russia, as well as the Japanese ambassador, Nagata, in Moscow. The latter is one of Japan's most eminent diplomats. He has been counsellor to the embassy at Washington and director of the trade bureau. In 1922 and 1923 he was vice-minister for foreign affairs and director of the Japanese intelligence bureau. He is also president of the powerful newspaper, the Japan Times.

I found him thoroughly informed on every phase of Soviet policy practice. He has had all the more important Soviet data, including laws and reports, translated. He knows just what concessions are most advantageous. His Russian legal adviser formerly served with Soviet Foreign Minister Tchicherin.

The ambassador explained that one of the chief mistakes of foreigners in Moscow was to appraise the situation by western standards.

"Russia is really much more Oriental than it is European. You can't judge everything by their revolutionary slogans," he said.

"Hopelessly in Dark"

"Actually, Soviet Russia is becoming stabilized economically. . . . For the most part Russian statistics are reliable. To be sure, the country is large, trained statisticians few, and some errors inevitable.

"A clear differentiation should be made between the Communist Party, the Communist Internationale, and the Russian Government. The first is a party mechanism, the second a voluntary world organization, while the third is similar to any other stable and powerful government.

"Russian trade unions now embrace about ten million members of every political belief; they are growing steadily and swiftly, whereas the Communist Party tends to remain small, hardly over a million. To some extent it might be said that in consequence the trade unions may be stronger than the party.

"There is not the remotest danger of armed conflict between Russia and Japan, for it is much more profitable for both countries to be on friendly terms."

In the light of the complete and reliable knowledge of the Japanese Ambassador, consider the position of our State Department.

Herbert Hoover is reported to know the Russian situation better than any other American official, but where does he secure his facts? Before leaving the United States I took occasion to find out. I was authoritatively informed that Mr. Hoover believed his representative, Mr. Carl J. Meyer, the commercial attache in Riga, "knew the situation in Russia better than any one else."

A NEW portrait of Georges Tchicherin, the Foreign Minister of Soviet Russia, who guides the present relations between Moscow and Tokio.

PREMIER TANAKA, of Japan, formerly War Minister, who inaugurated the new policy of Japan toward Soviet Russia in Eastern Asia.

A CLOSE-UP of Leon M. Karahan, former Soviet Ambassador at Peking, and now director of the Far-Eastern Division of the Foreign Office in Moscow.

Given Warning

I made a special trip to see Mr. Meyer. I found a man who had been for some years in Russia under the Czar's regime as manager of the International Harvester Company. With the advent of the revolution he lost the work of a lifetime. In consequence, his friendship to the Bolsheviks was not marked! He warned me:

"You will be shadowed everywhere you go in Moscow and permitted to see only what the government wants you to see."

(As a matter of fact I was given complete freedom. It is true that a strong secret service mechanism exists, but it no longer is used as before.)

I was further informed by Mr. Meyer that if I went into the villages I would quite likely be killed by the peasants, a statement which is contradicted by the experience of all the American correspondents. Actually I went into village after village alone, sleeping on the hay to avoid vermin.

With such data it is small wonder that the United States government finds itself hopelessly in the dark compared with Japan. The latter has an adequate consular and embassy staff operating in the heart of Russia and in other cities. We have no representatives in all Russia, and the consuls who are scattered in the border states are subjected to the subtle influence of those who for one reason or another wish to warp or twist the facts.

No matter how intelligent a United States consul, and no matter how much he desires to be fair, it is easy to see that he cannot be so reliably informed on conditions in Russia as is the Japanese ambassador, and what has been the result?

Secret Soviet-Jap Pact

Take the matter of concessions. America has secured two important grants, one to the Harriman interests for 20 years to exploit manganese and the other to the (British-American) Lena Gold Fields Corporation to mine and export gold for 50 years. But these are both as child's play to what the Japanese have secured.

Bear in mind that the terms of the concessions to the Japanese have not been made public in their entirety. Both the Soviet and the Japanese governments are anxious to keep them confidential. However, I was able to uncover sufficient data to make certain of the magnitude of the concessions. Still others are about to be concluded.

There is, first of all, the Soviet-Japanese Treaty of 1925 which stipulated that Russia stood ready to grant Japanese concessions for the exploitation of mineral, timber and other resources in all of its territory.

Specifically, in Northern Sakhalin, Japan has the right to explore and exploit the oil fields and coal deposits for from 40 to 50 years. Japan agrees to turn over from 5 to 8 per cent of the gross coal output to Russia and from 5 to 15 per cent of the oil output, except that in the case of a gusher the royalty may be raised to 45 per cent.

The companies are given the right to cut lumber and import and export free of duty. These concessions are already being worked by the Japanese and are without question the most valuable which any foreigners have secured.

Numerous Concessions

Up to now there has been a total of nearly 100 other concessions which the Japanese have tried to secure. Among those which have been granted are the following:

FISHING RIGHTS—Japan now controls approximately three-fourths of the fishing industry in the Far East and has large canning factories on Russian soil.

TIMBER RIGHTS—The right to exploit certain very valuable forest regions.

GOLD RIGHTS — To discover and mine gold in the Kamchatka region over an area covering nearly 100,000 square miles. This is about 50 times as large an area as that granted to the British-American firm.

Japanese export and import with Russia is growing by leaps and bounds. Although in the year 1926 their trade was far less than that of the United States, the figures for 1927 will show a substantial increase.

They are now exporting to Russia rice, sugar, beans, peas, canned goods, paper, hats and caps, cotton fabrics, iron and machinery, besides a host of manufactured articles.

Even as far back as 1924 Russia was sending to Japan one-sixth as many steamers as the United States. In 1926-27 Japan was importing from Russia nearly 10 times as much as under the Czar's regime.

All in all, Japan is acting strategically and diplomatically to exploit Russia economically to the maximum. As Ambassador Nagata told me, 'she recognizes clearly that Russia has probably the richest undeveloped mineral resources in the world and she proposes to get her share of the pie.

'WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS'

Our skull and limb bones also begin as cartilage—and in some fishes the skull remains cartilage. Much of our long bones and skull is still cartilage at birth; hence the pliancy of the new born's head.

Shark embryos have five gill-arches with openings, or gill-clefts, between, and two branchial arches from which the shark forms its poorly developed lower jaw.

Most of these arches and the branchial clefts between appear at the third week in the human fetus. The way the clefts disappear and the arches develop into the extraordinarily complicated human throat is possibly the most interesting and confused chapter in human embryology.

From one of the two arches which develop into jaws in sharks, the human fetus develops its lower jaw and two of the three tiny bones of the inner ear; from the other arch, the third bone of the inner ear, the styloid process at the base of the skull, and the cartilage of the external ear. The hyoid apparatus which supports our tongue develops also from this and from the first gill-arch. The second and third gill-arches become the thyroid cartilages, or Adam's apple; the fourth, the epiglottis; the fifth, the windpipe cartilages.

As the human embryo will develop into a lung-breather and will have no need of gills, the gill-clefts do not break through; after the sixth week no outward trace of them remains. But around one end of the first cleft the fetal ear develops; the remainder becomes the Eustachian tube, or passage from the mouth to the tympanic cavity of the ear.

The second branchial arch, from which fish embryos develop gill-cover and gill muscles, is supplied by the seventh cranial nerve. This arch in the human fetus is also supplied by that nerve; it grows upward and becomes the great nerve of our face, supplying ears, mouth, nose and eyes. An amazing story, this. The nerves of our face moved the gill-covers of our respiratory system when we were fishes.

At the time the gill-clefts are present the human fetus has a freely projecting tail and four tiny paddle-like limbs.

Our nervous system is the most complex mechanism in the universe; certainly no other system in our body is to be compared with it in intricacy or in is unique capacity to learn. Because of this capacity, the evolution of man became possible and we are what we are. In fact, the goal of evolution, as we shall see, was always in the direction of a broader outlook, a greater capacity to anticipate change and weather storm. The nervous system is the only key evolved to unlock the future. We shall pay due respect to it; at this point we can only glance at its structural development.

Before the embryo is a month old, a depression or trough appears on the upper surface of the outer germ-layer. It deepens. The upper edges come together, forming the neural tube, so called because from it will develop the nervous system. In the third month the tube expands at one end into three sacs or vesicles; the first and third of these divide and there result five vesicles in all. The walls of these hollow sacs will develop into the brain; the sacs themselves will form the ventricles (little belly) of the brain.

The remainder of the neural tube will become the spinal cord. This, in the four months' embryo, is as long as the vertebral column; thereafter the column grows faster than the cord.

At birth, all the cells of the nervous system are present. The new-born will develop no new brain cells, but structural changes will take place in the nerves which are in control of the motor mechanism; otherwise the infant would remain as helpless as when born.

Sometimes the bones of the skull grow together prematurely; this prevents further growth of the brain. Such a brain is called microcephalous and vaguely resembles the brain of monkeys.

Monsters are sometimes delivered in which the brain has never developed beyond the first month of fetal life—the original nerve plate remains spread out on the surface at the back of the head.

An English shepherd, who died at the age of 60, was normal except for his very small head. He had a human countenance, but a vacant stare. He could count his fingers, but not his sheep or the days of the week. He could talk simple sentences. His brain was one-third normal size and its fissures were like a fetal brain of seven months, but lower in type than that of a chimpanzee. The parts associated with speech were of the size and form found in anthropoid apes. It was the type of brain our ancestors had millions of years ago.

Man's brain is from two to three times larger than that of the gorilla, but, apart from mere size, man and ape brains are more alike than are their big toes.

Brain weights vary enormously. The average for adult male Europeans is about 1,375 grams, for females about 1,235. The brain of Turgueneff, the Russian novelist, weighed 2,012 grams. It is exceeded by that of only two others; one was an imbecile. Next in weight come a laborer (1,925 grams) and a bricklayer (1,900 grams). Gambetta's brain weighed only 1,294 grams. The largest woman's brain recorded is 1,742 grams; she was insane and died of consumption. The third largest woman's brain recorded weighed 1,580 grams; she also was insane.

There is no evidence that size of brain (or of head) is necessarily connected with attual or potential intelligence. Usually, large individuals have large brains; men are larger than women. Large brains have no more units than small brains; the units are large. A small brain is no more necessarily handicapped than a small hand or a small foot.

We do not use the brains we have. Presumably, we no more get the maximum service out of our brains than we do out of our motor-mechanism. For every book on how to train the brain there are a dozen on how to train the muscles. But not one man in 50 who goes in for muscle-training expects to put his muscles to work; he sees physical culture as physical beauty.

READY-MADE By FANNIE HURST

Twins Go Different Paths in Search of Happiness

TWO girls—twins, singularly sensitive to each other, singularly congenial, singularly lovely.

And both with the same ideal of the man they would marry. A Gallahad sort of a man. A man who embodied the perfection of all the heroes of fact and fancy since the beginning of time.

One of them found him.

FROM the time they had first lifted their voices in squalls, "The Allyn Twins" were destined for local fame. Taken each by themselves, there would have been sufficient cause for recognition of an outstanding personality. But here were beauty, brains and individuality happening twice in the same place.

The Allyn twins caused a dent in the world in which they lived.

They were not exactly identical. That is, they could readily be told apart. They did not dress alike, they did not necessarily resemble in manner, but in temperament, in reckless charm of personality, they were similar as two peas in a pod, as well as in the way they carried their heads . . . small, somewhat patrician heads, beautifully balanced on slender necks.

Eve was somewhat taller and perhaps more beautiful. Her violet eyes were fringed in longer, blacker lashes, her skin the whiteness of a magnolia leaf without blemish. Iris, almost imperceptibly less fair, had a softer, more perfect mouth than her sister.

As is inevitable in such cases, there were those who thought Eve more beautiful than Iris, and vice versa; there were those who thought Iris more characterful than Eve, and vice versa.

In any event, they were an arresting, gorgeous pair of creatures, filled with the hopes, the dreams, the ideals, the nonsenses, the courage of youth. They wanted Life. They were eager for it. Hungry for it. And full of curiosity about it.

IN THE pretty town in which they lived, the social life of the community whirled to a large extent around the fine old homestead of Judge Allyn.

The twins kept the rambling mansion lively. Lights blared from its windows, nights. Dances took place there. Eager youths ran up the broad front steps. It was a house of merriment.

There was no mother. She had died giving birth to her twins. Eve and Iris ruled there.

They were curiously inter-dependent, these two girls.

Certain similarities of temperament bound them closely. Even at 17 they were like school girls awaiting the coming of a Gallahad. Even while the picked youths of the town milled around them and it was said locally that every young eligible in the community had proposed to one or both of the Allyn twins, the two of them clung tenaciously to the dream of the Gallahad.

The Gallahad of their imaginings was a glorious, fair young deity. A combination of all they most romantically admired in the men they had seen, all they had most wistfully desired in the heroes of fiction, myth and history they had read about.

A knight "sans peur et sans reproche." A god-like creature who combined all the virtues, all the gallantries, all the wisdom and beauty of all the heroes of all the ages.

The old judge, whose indulgence toward his girls seemed to know no limit, shook his wise old head at the nonchalance with which they turned their slim young backs on what seemed opportunity after opportunity for worldly and wise marriages.

Between them, the girls had created the ideal. Between them, they held out for the coming of the youth who would embody this ideal, and of course, into the snug little world in which they moved, he did not enter.

It was Eve who first capitulated to the realization that these sophomoric yearnings belonged to the schoolroom. She was jerked to this awareness by a young fellow named Pat Ryan, whom she refused on Sunday and eloped with on Monday.

It was one of the social sensations of the town. Pat Ryan was the only son of a highly successful local builder and an up-and-coming successor to his father. He was a normal, healthy-minded, sound-principled young fellow, minus practically all of the Lothario-qualities with which the twins had invested their hypothetical hero, but filled with what the old judge regarded as "good horse sense." It was a match after the old judge's heart.

The marriage of Eve was the most devastating event that had ever come into Iris' life. It left her stunned, lonely, disillusioned, even tragic. She considered that Life's firmest prop had been dashed out from under her.

Eve had failed her. Eve was common clay.

BE THAT as it may, the Pat Ryans rented a bungalow in the new part of the town and started housekeeping on the young fellow's salary. It was pretty much of a struggle because one of old man Ryan's theories was that his son should earn his way into the business, rather than inherit it. The judge agreed.

From the very start, it might be said that Eve began what she regarded as the pleasant task of reforming her husband. Time and time again, she assured Iris that if Pat was not the prototype of their ideal, half the fun of marrying him was in making him conform to that ideal.

Pat himself was such fun, imbued as he was with a merry good nature that was characteristic of him. He gave in where it did not matter, but stood firm in larger issues where his judgment overruled. Essentially different, it was as if Eve was a complement to those qualities lacking in Pat, and he in turn began to act as prop to several little characteristics in Eve that even her family agreed needed jacking up.

They joked and squabbled and made up. They criticized and blamed and praised. And each day, out of their happy or troubled adjustments to each other, grew a better understanding, a surer foundation for lifelong companionship.

And yet—Pat was not the man Iris and Eve had dreamed about. Not the fir Gallahad sort of man that people meet only in books and their imaginings. Just a blundering, imperfect, striving, altogether desirable young man—as full of faults as he was full of ambition, energy and enthusiasm.

It was surprising, even to Iris, to whom the marriage was still anathema, the compatability these two managed to eke out of their incompatability.

It was left to Iris to carry on the quest for the golden fleece, to find the ideal that she and Eve had dreamed out through the long, sweet years of their girlhood.

Eve had failed.

Failed not only to find her Gallahad—their Gallahad—but failed in a truce with their youth with their faith in the perfection of life and love.

It was this sense that Eve had failed her—that Eve, after all, was content with something short of perfection, like the countless millions of other women that had kept the world going through the generations — that disillusioned Iris. Disillusioned her, hurt her, stunned her, but made her vow again, though this time to herself, that she would go through life alone unless she found the realization of their girlhood dreams.

And then Iris found him.

There came to town to execute a park statue of the governor of the state a young sculptor with a name already distinguished on two continents by the high quality of his work. Even his name, the first time she heard it, struck thrill to the heart of Iris. Orlando Blake.

He was tall, he was handsome, he was sensitive. He was blonde. Four fundamental characteristics that girls had woven into their sophomoric visions. He was as close to their hypothetical hero as can be reasonably expected of a flesh-and-blood young man subject to the daily wear-and-tear of a planet called Earth. They were married in a garden and the old judge stood by and Eve, in pink organdy and lavendar sweet peas, and Pat, who was big and restless and good-natured and kept jerking his head about in his collar as he always did under stress.

It was said locally that Iris and Orlando were the most stunningly-handsome young couple in the history of town annals. The old judge and Eve and Pat and a swarm of friends who had known Iris since she could lisp, threw tried-and-true old shoes and rice after the honeymooners' train.

WHAT happened subsequently is not to be recorded as the fault of Olando. He measured up pretty fairly to the ideals of two giggling young girls who had created him in effigy before he had ever arrived on the scene.

It was just somehow that Iris and Orlando had no compatability. He was there, ready-made, so to speak. To Iris, it was like walking into a complete home. There was nothing for her to do or create. The hangings were up at the windows . . . the right color. The rugs were on the floor. Nothto do. Within two years their marriage was a public failure.

Iris lives with the Pat Ryans now. Orlando has married again. Eve has three youngsters. It's a merry household. Eve and Pat have their squabbles. It hasn't been easy inculcating in him some of her ideals of what he ought to be. But helping and making him has drawn them very close.

The Pat Ryans have made a go of it.

The BOOK SHELF For Readers and Writers by George Seibel

Great and Near-Great

GREAT MEN are not worshiped as devoutly as in Carlyle's day, yet more biographies are being written than ever, and authors like Emil Ludwig rank among the "best sellers." One may well ask whether biography may not crowd out some other forms of fiction, for as one considers the variant estimates of any great man by various critics, it seems hopeless to establish any norm of greatness. For example, here are three biographies—"Charles Darwin," by Henshaw Ward; "The Unknown Barnum," by Harvey W. Root, and "Woodrow Wilson," by Ray Stannard Baker. According to the reader's individual point of view, it will be impossible to affirm which was the Great Humbug, the Great Showman, the Great Thinker and Leader of Men. It all depends on whether the reader is a Fundamentalist, a Rationalist, or a Political Idealist. Even political idealists differ about Wilson as they would about Barnum. And Fundamentalists might rank Barnum ahead of Darwin, for Barnum once wrote: "I have been almost as much a theologian as a showman all my life."

It is indeed difficult to separate the human species into goats and sheep by any formula. We find in Henshaw Ward's fine life of "Charles Darwin" (published by Bobbs-Merrill), that Darwin as a boy used to be a fleet runner, and when in doubt about reaching his goal in time "prayed earnestly to God to help me, and I well remember that I attributed my success to the prayers." He was at one time intended for the ministry, and a phrenologist told him his bump of reverence was sufficient for 10 priests. Yet this is the man, buried in Westminster Abbey and anathematized by William Jennings Bryan, who did more to overthrow the old theology than all the Higher Critics.

One learns to love this patient, kindly, courageous and sincere seeker, as one gets better acquainted with him in Ward's pages. For Darwin was after all pre-eminent as a Seeker. No one was ever less dogmatic. Born on the same day as Abraham Lincoln, he had enough qualities resembling Lincoln's to give the atavistic astrologer a chance to point out auspicious stars.

"I do not believe he ever spoke an angry word to any of his children in his life," his son records. If there was any dominant characteristic besides his love of truth, it was his modesty. "He habitually formed so humble an estimate of the value of all his works that he was generally surprised at the interest which they excited."

Turning from Darwin to "The Unknown Barnum" (published by Harpers), we get another surprise. Who would have thought of P. T. Barnum as a political reformer? Yet the chapter on "Barnum as Legislator" shows him fighting railroad corruption with effective weapons, and also waging a noble warfare for Negro rights and suffrage. Harvey W. Root's book goes far to substantiate the estimate of Barnum given by an editorial of "The Sun" in 1865:

"Those who look upon Barnum as a mere charlatan have really no knowledge of him. It would be easy to demonstrate that the qualities that have placed him in his present position of notoriety and affluence would, in another pursuit, have raised him to far greater eminence. In his breadth of views, his profound knowledge of mankind, his courage under reverses, his indomitable perseverance, his ready eloquence and his admirable business tact, we recognize the elements that are conducive to success in most other pursuits."

Memories of Jenny Lind, of General Tom Thumb, of Jumbo and the "Feejee Mermaid" are interwoven with the picturesque record of the first sensational advertiser and greatest of all showmen. He knew psychology as a practical science better than William James, and if he had persevered in politics he might be revered as a sage and statesman.

It is all in the point of view. Even the same man's point of view may change in a few years. The most enthusiastic campaign biographer of Woodrow Wilson wrote the bitterest analysis of him a few years later. But Ray Stannard Baker in his "Woodrow Wilson" (published by Doubleday, Page & Co.), is the hero-worshiper. His hero is Galahad and St. George rolled in one. These two volumes deal with Wilson's youth and the years at Princeton. We hear that "he did not learn his letters until nine years old." We learn he considered it a great find when he discovered a Presbyterian church "where there is first-rate preaching—and plenty of pretty girls." Mr. Baker admits that Wilson's books "miss being great history." But all these bits of detraction are lost in the large accumulation of encomiums and haloes. Even Theodore Roosevelt gets a left-handed slap for the greater glory of Wilson. Not as naive as Parson Weems, originator of the Washington legend, Mr. Baker makes a valiant effort to sculpture a heroic and superhuman effigy of the War President. The Wilsonians will accept and acclaim it; the Rooseveltians will deny and decry it. So what can be done but wait a hundred years and then give Rupert Hughes a chance?

JULIAN GREEN
Author of "Avarice House."

The Black Journey

There still are opportunities for Marco Polo and Captain Cook. "The Black Journey" (published by Cosmopolitan) is an account, written by Georges-Marie Haardt and Louis Audouin-Dubreuil, of the Citroen expedition across Central Africa. Cannibals, pigmies, sorcerers and devil-worshipers are among the human specimens encountered. Wild beasts howl and make night hideous, huge pythons coil about tropic trees, hippopotami wallow in lakes of muck, elephants stampede through the jungle, herds of zebras are galloping the plain. It is a book for the naturalist and the lover of adventure. The creator of new fashions will find here some of the most bizarre and sensational inspirations to shock Paris. And the chef may come across suggestions like this:

"Why do they love dogs so much in your country?" he asks Tobo.

"Because cook little dog in the earth with banana leaves . . . better much than little pig!" he replies at once with a smack of his lips.

"Disraeli," by Andre Maurois.

THE NEW FICTION

Avarice House

Julian Green is considered in France one of the ablest of the younger novelists. Although he is an American living abroad, his new novel "Avarice House" (published by Harper & Bros.) was originally written in French and comes to us through the translation of Marshall A. Best. Despite its pseudo-French origin, it is a story of America. Three women—mother, daughter and grandmother—live together in a large farmhouse near Wilmington. The house belongs to Mrs. Fletcher, whom both her mother and her daughter hate for that and for her miserly nature, which almost freezes and starves them to death. Their intrigue against her ends in misery and tragedy. The somber picture is a powerful study of three highly erratic natures at war with one another and the world.

The French Wife

Dorothy Graham has written a novel of the French life that is only too often adopted by American women. In "The French Wife" (published by Stokes) the heroine is really a French widow her husband having been killed in an accident while off on one of his many Casanovan adventures. She finds herself mistress of an old aristocratic title and a beautiful old chateau, as well as mother of two French children. An American girl, although she has completely absorbed the suave traditions of the Old World, she has to choose between a second French marriage and marriage with one of her own countrymen. Miss Graham handles the contrasting nuances of each people with deft artistry and understanding.

Miss Mayhew and Ming Yun

As a picture of modern China, "Miss Mayhew and Ming Yun" (published by Stokes) seems to ring truer than most tales of this land of mystery and romance. Anne Duffield has the power to make her Chinese characters of flesh and blood, instead of incense and nonsense. Miss Mayhew, a little old Englishwoman, comes to Pekin to help her nephew Stephen, whose wife is dying. In the household she finds a Manchu princess who is Stephen's ward. The slow evolution of friendship and understanding between Miss Mayhew and the Princess Ming Yun forms a fascinating and diverting tale.

The Rio Rustlers

At last a Western story with a difference! In "The Rio Rustlers" (published by Macaulay), James French Dorrance shows us a ranch on the Rio Grande which is ultra-modern. The Princess, as she is called, employs an electrical engineer to install electric power on her ranch. Then things happen. Roundups by automobile, electrified fences, are lights that talk, hunting rustlers with searchlights, and finally a unique use of high-frequency current that is as hair-raising as it is spectacular, make this an electrically thrilling story.

Poison Shadows

Another thriller, "Poison Shadows" (published by Macaulay), comes to harrow those who like to be harrowed. William Le Queux writes the tale of an old guest-house at Hampton Court. This house has witnessed many sinister doings, but has been closed for many years. Sybil Dare suddenly becomes its owner through her uncle's will, with the express stipulation that she must live in it. Its evil reputation is no idle tale, she soon discovers, but the shadows are finally cleared away and explained to perfect satisfaction.

Concealed Turnings

"Concealed Turnings" (published by Macaulay) is the harrowing story of what happens to a young and beautiful girl who comes under the hypnotic influence of a villainous Hindu. A mixture of horror and romance, passion and mysticism, this tale by Pamela Wynne shows no mercy for long-suffering emotions. Much and plenty happens, both in London and India, before poor Hazel Ansen reaches the final refuge of her lover's arms.

The Verdict of the Sea

The sea as a touchstone of true character is the underlying theme in "The Verdict of the Sea" (published by Dutton). So to test the worth of his characters, Alan Sullivan puts them out to sea. James Denham, a struggling young London doctor, loses his money and feels he must sacrifice his love for the beautiful Agnes Holland because of his poverty, so he goes to sea. And the sea solves all his problems. A delightful tale of adventure, vivid characters, sympathetic romance, diamonds, and mutinous crews.

Spiderweb Clues

Paul Thorne adds a clever tale of crime and suspense to the shelf of real thrillers. "Spiderweb Clues" (published by Penn Publishing Co.), is the story of mysterious John Craig, who on a train to Chicago rescues a beautiful girl from kidnaping and becomes entangled in a coil of intrigue and murder. The plot holds up to the very end.

Lincoln Anniversary Programs From Three Studios

Chamber Music Society to Make Debut Radio---Soloist and Reader in Feature Roles

OF LINCOLN—Elbert R. Moses will give a reading of "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," Sunday at 3 o'clock through KDKA.

FIRST TIME—Carolyn Beebe and the New York Chamber Music Society will broadcast for the first time in its history through the associated stations of the National Broadcasting Company Red Network Saturday night. The society's program will include many impositions of favorite old masters, as well as numerous works of the lighter type.

CONTRALTO—Adelaide de Loco will be the featured artist in the program by Roxy and His Gang Monday through KDKA.

Popular Offerings Crowd Schedules

Three Pittsburgh radio stations Sunday will broadcast programs in celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln.

Elbert R. Moses of the Pittsburgh School of Speech will read the "Life of the Great Lincoln" at 3 p. m. before the microphone of KDKA. Mr. Moses precedes his dramatizations with a half hour history of the early life of Lincoln, following which he stages the dramatic scene in the Wigwam at the memorable Chicago convention; Mr. Lincoln's notification at his home in Springfield; the choosing of his cabinet; the farewell speech to the home folks; the trip, with sidelights, to Washington. Then follow scenes in the White House with Judge Stanton, William H. Seward, Secretary Chase, Mrs. Lincoln and others. The program is brought to a close with the story of the assassination at Ford's Theater by John Wilkes Booth.

A further observance from KDKA will be a talk by James W. Gerard, former United States ambassador to Germany, on "The Character of Lincoln," Sunday at 9:15 o'clock.

Members of the Grand Army of the Republic will be guests of honor at the men's conference of the Bedford Branch Y. M. C. A., New York, Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at which Dr. Alexander Lyons will speak on "The Secret of Lincoln's Power." This talk will be heard through WCAE.

Musical compositions that were favorites of the Great Emancipator and others that are typical of the period in which he lived will be interpreted by the American Singers at 9:30 p. m. Sunday through WJAS. The program will open with "Captain, My Captain," and artists to take part will be Charles Harrison, tenor; Redferne Hollinshead, tenor; Vernon Archibald, baritone, and Frank Croxton, bass.

Many other programs of interest are to be found among the many scheduled for broadcast from the different stations throughout Sunday. The voice of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will be heard during the Collier Hour of KDKA at 8:15 o'clock, when he will speak on "Character in Business." Bits of weird music from the Near East will come from that station during the "Man from Cook's" period at 6:30 p. m. The Utica Jubilee Singers and Don Amaizo will close the day's broadcasts from KDKA, beginning at 9:45 o'clock.

On the Sunday schedule of WCAE are found the names of Mathilde Harding, pianist; Arcadie Birkenholz, violinist, and Charles Hackett, tenor. Miss Harding and Mr. Birkenholz will entertain with Beethoven's "C Minor Sonata, Opus 30, No. 2," at 7 p. m. The voice of Mr. Hackett, assisted by the Atwater Kent singers and Atwater Kent Orchestra, under the direction of Reinald Werrenrath, will be heard, beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

WJAS as usual offers its first of the week Columbia program in five parts, opening at 8 p. m., with the Symphonic Hour and closing at 10 p. m. with Don Voorhees and his band.

Many popular programs are included in the radio schedules for this week, and among the headliners are:

Monday—KDKA, Adelaide de Loca, one-time stenographer, with Roxy and Gang; WCAE, Rosa Raisa in General Motors Family Party; WJAS, flute and vocal solos in Musical Album of Popular Classics.

Tuesday—KDKA, Carnegie Institute of Technology Hour of Entertainment; WCAE, Seiberling Singers in Pan-American selections.

Wednesday—KDKA, Sylvania Foresters and Godfrey Ludlow, violinist; WCAE, "Ernani," Verdi's opera, by National Grand Opera Ensemble; WJAS, Spanish, Russian, Hungarian-Gypsy and German music in Columbia Hour.

Thursday—KDKA, Ampico Hour of compositions by Rudolf Friml; WCAE, Frank Black, Elliott Shaw, Andy Sanella, Earl Oliver, Joe Green and Lou Raderman, in Dodge broadcast.

Friday—KDKA, Mme. Lolita Cabrera Gainsborg in old Italian compositions; WCAE, Anglo-Persians, in musical works "vivid with Oriental color;" WJAS, Cap'n Kidd.

Saturday—KDKA, "Princess Pat," a comic opera in three acts, with Jessica Dragonette, during Philco Hour; WCAE, High Jinkers.

Mewed Prettily, Six Get Names Of Announcers

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.

"CAN you tell me the names of your six most popular announcers?" asked a voice that called up a member of the National Broadcasting Company program department on the telephone.

"Yes, to be sure," replied the lady in gray who answered the call, "but would you mind telling me why you ask?"

"Well," said the voice at the other end of the wire, "our cat has just had six kittens, and they have already started to mew so prettily that I wanted to name them after singers. And the singers we heard most sing over the radio. Your announcers all sing, don't they? Well, then!"

And so, somewhere in New York there are six little kittens who answer dutifully to names of Graham, Phillips, Milton, Marley, Ralph and Alois.

Studios Giving False News to Lose Licenses

COMMISSION ACTS ON MANY COMPLAINTS

Radio Czars to Deal Summarily With Broadcasters Giving Fake Reports.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—(AP.)—The Federal Radio Commission will cancel the license of any radio station which broadcasts false news reports.

This was the declaration of members of the commission after receipt of information that erroneous reports of disasters frequently were being broadcast.

Newspapermen informed the commission that they were continually plagued by these rumors and were forced to spend much time running them down. One such report was the alleged radio announcement that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh had been killed in an airplane crash in Panama.

Commissioner O. H. Caldwell declared the commission would deal summarily with any station which spread false news of a disaster without making extraordinary efforts to verify it. He said he doubted if any responsible station would broadcast such reports, owing to the severe penalty for such offense and the desire of station operators to keep the good will of the public.

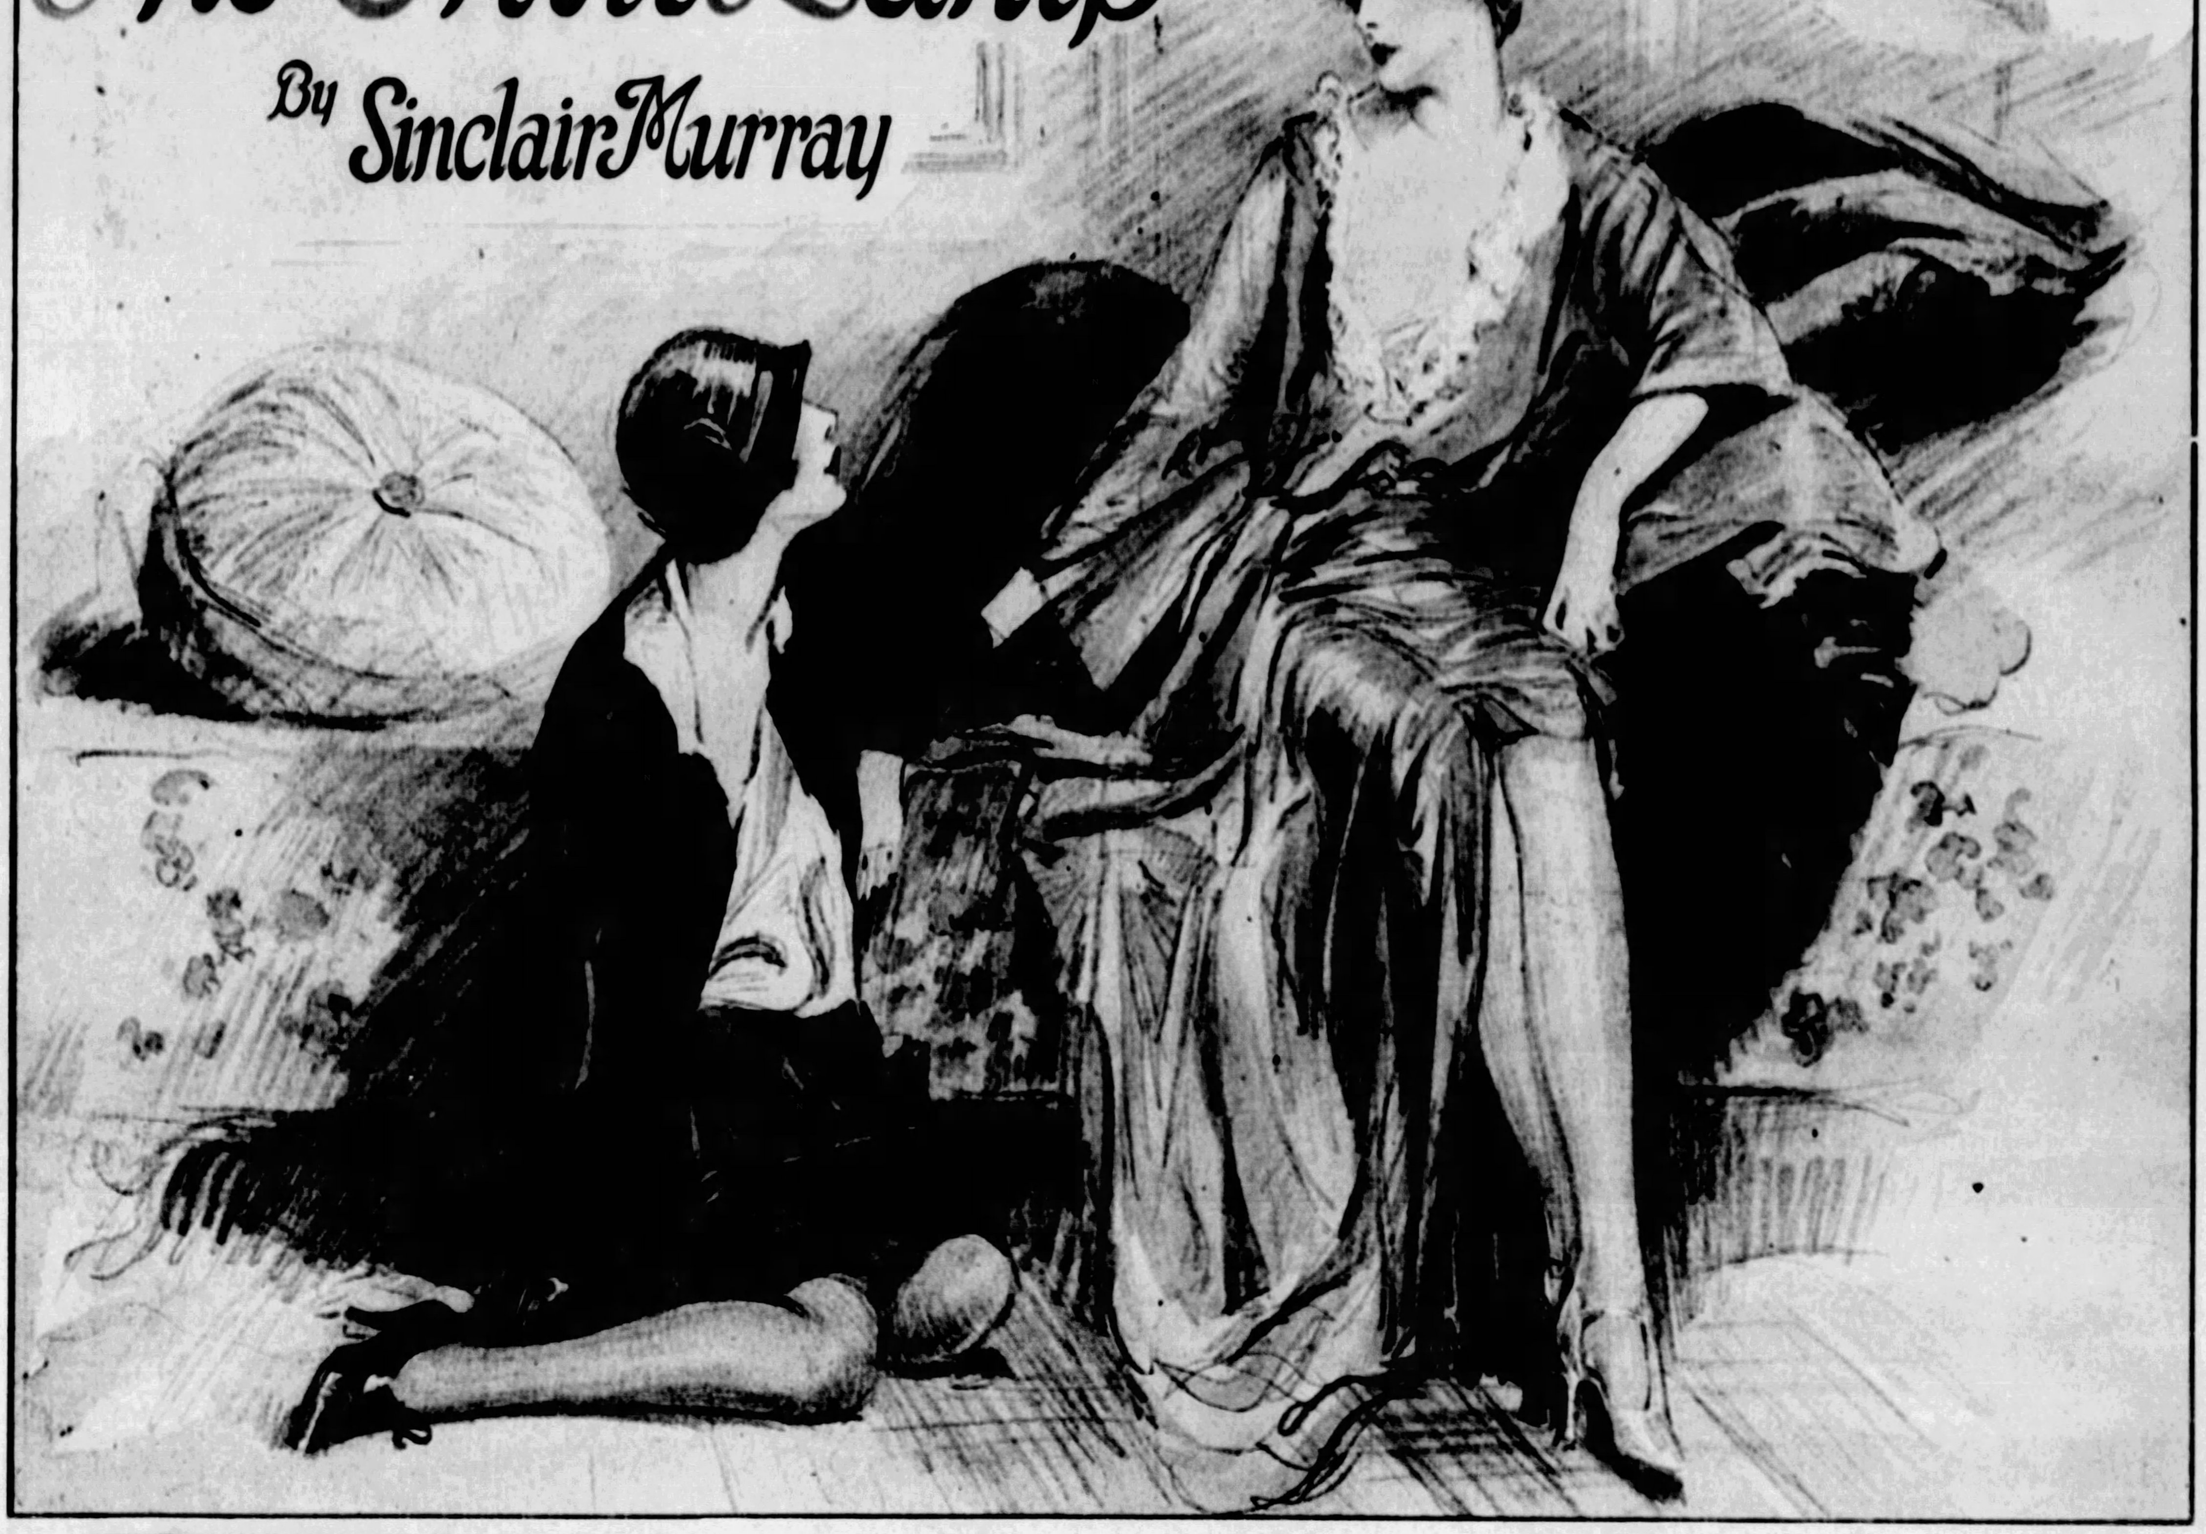
By Sinclair Murray



Feverill Slid a Small Signet Ring Set With a Flat Emerald on Her Finger.

Illustrated by Charles D. Mitchell

"I have been scared stiff, and it's done me good," said Lois. "I'm not betting any more, not spending and not borrowing."

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

VERE CRAIG, something of a modern Diana, must raise $7,500 to pay a debt incurred by the extravagance of her younger sister, Lois. She cannot ask her father, a retired colonel, for the money, and the only other possibility is a trust fund of $10,000 she is to receive when she marries. Vere meets Michael Feverill, an explorer, who is about to leave for Africa, never to return. In desperation she asks Feverill to marry her.

AT this demand, made with complete self-possession and devoid of any vestige of warmth, not a proposal, but asking rather if he were afraid to marry her, Feverill jerked back his head as a skilled boxer evades a blow. He gave no sound, but his narrowing eyes regarded her with a sudden and profound interest. No warmth in this either. Just curiosity, and a trace of amusement.

"Do you quite realize what you say?"

"I do."

"Then will you cross over to my table a minute. Dartrey's gone, and the Pollitts are coming back."

She followed, wordless, edging round the dancing floor, and aware that Mrs. Pollitt's glance was pursuing her.

"You think I'm mad?" she asked coolly, taking Dartrey's chair.

He shook his head. "No, you're not mad. You're forced into this. Has anyone hurt you?"

He had gone straight to the point. Someone had!

"Yes; but I can't tell you. Please don't ask." Her voice trembled a little. "And—from my side—there's no reason you shouldn't marry me. Is that enough?"

He nodded slowly. "You needn't have said that. Certain things are obvious. What you propose is that I should marry you—then say good-bye."

"Exactly."

"Is my name so important? I never thought it so."

"I wouldn't use your name."

He stared, a vertical wrinkle between his brows.

"Then it would not be made public?"

"No. And another thing would be understood. There'd be no obligation on either side."

He began to look incredulous. "Of any kind?"

"Of any kind. I ask you to marry me—and forget me. It is necessary that my solicitor knows, but no one else. When either of us desires to end it—" here she paused a moment, looking straight in his face, "which might be any time—the other must help, not oppose."

His lips twitched a little. "You do not mention any consideration."

"I have none to offer, Mr. Feverill."

"Egad! but you're an honest girl!"

That seemed to stick in his mind—her honesty. He liked it. And she, waiting, breathless, felt a wave of hope, seeing that it was this—not her looks, not the feminine, physical, alluring part of her—that was at work. It was like a gush of cold air—fresh—strengthening.

"You know nothing about me, except that I'm going away," he said, approaching the thing from another angle.

"Is it necessary that I should, if we are nothing to each other?" She made herself say this, trying to remember that it was all part of the price of her love for Lois. And she had a great fear for Lois.

He looked at her very hard and steadily, as though she had given him something new to think about. And she, with all her old watchfulness awake, would have known instantly if, in the slightest degree, he was yielding to the thing that had mastered so many other men. Now was the Bolshevik Character Suggesting an Unpleasant Dream of Red Russia.

Not Quite So Grotesque Is This Doll, the One Exhibit That Has Traces of Beauty.

PARIS, Feb. 3.

THE trend of fantasy which has affected literature, the stage and other forms of art has begun to hit even the art of doll-making in Paris. Long ago the pretty but rather inane bisque dolls were replaced by dolls which had less perfection of feature, but considerably more character. It was not so very long ago that dolls passed from the realm of the juvenile to the adult, and various character dolls began to make their appearance on the sofas of some of the homes. The fad spread like wildfire, and now it is a common sight in almost any home.

The general character of these dolls for adults tended toward the grotesque rather than the beautiful. They were figures with extremely long legs and arms, clowns, women of the Audrey Beardsley type, and other eccentricities of art. Considerable competition arose in the matter of designing new and striking dolls. Just now, in Paris, the acknowledged queen of the bizarre doll creators is a Russian, Mme. Zina Wassilief, of

Her macabre dolls have been an overnight sensation. Impoverished, she came to Paris not long ago, and faced starvation when she hit upon the idea of making some bizarre dolls. Possibly she reflected in her eerie creations, the black despondency which must have been her mood. She probably was the most surprised woman in Paris when she found that they not only interested the dealers, but sold like hot cakes, and at very fancy prices.

The garret days are over for Mme. Wassilieff. Today she lives in a fine studio apartment, part of which has been remodeled as a factory for the making of the dolls. She has more orders for her dolls than she can possibly execute. One of the art critics of the city has written of her product:

"Mme. Wassilieff's heads have a curiously human look. They are clever and amusing character studies, so potently ugly as to be beautiful."

Mme. Wassilieff went to Vienna, gave an exhibition of her nightmare dolls there; returned to Paris, gave an exhibition there, and has been invited to give a showing of her work in London. Some of her dolls have real hair, while others boast tresses of fur and fringe. To make the puppets she uses all sort of stuff—wax wood, linen, fur, pasteboard and beads.

French Stars Deserting to German Films

BERLIN, Feb. 2.

NOT long ago Paris went wild about a set of beautiful triplets from a country which had been France's traditional enemy for generations, that is, Germany. What the combined military forces of the ex-Kaiser failed to do these three beautiful fraulein accomplished. They captured Paris.

In a barrage of high kicks, an enfilade fire of smiles and a bombardment of charms, their naive personalities did more to wipe out war prejudices than the most clever diplomacy.

Now Paris has retaliated. In exchange for the beautiful triplets, and the large number of other German actresses who came to Paris following the success of the triplets, Paris began to send her actresses to Berlin. This was particularly true in the case of film stars. It began to assume the proportions of a wholesale desertion. The attention of the Paris critics was called to the situation when it became known recently that the beautiful Collette Darfeul, one of the most talented and popular of the French screen stars, had signed a contract with a German producing company.

In the matter of movies France is rather sensitive. France had been accustomed for a long time to lead the world in art. Her figures of the theatre have always been in the first rank of Thespian talent, as witness Bernhardt. Her painters and sculptors have been world-famous, her musicians eminent, her poets and playwrights famous. But France has always lagged behind in the matter of the movies. No great French movie star has ever risen to noticeable favor outside her own country. Mary Pickford, in her day, and Gloria Swanson, Norma Talmadge, Lillian Gish and Colleen Moore have been more popular in France than any of the native stars.

Germany, on the other hand, has been the only formidable competitor of the United States in the matter of motion pictures. America, indeed, recognizing what the German screen directors and technicians were contributing to the new art, imported several of the German stars and directors, notably Emil Jannings, who is now in the United States making pictures. While disinclined to credit anything German, French fans were forced to admit Germany's marked superiority in the movies. And the same point of view was taken by the French film stars. One by one they began to drop out of the French companies. Some went to Italy, some to the United States and some to Germany.

As far as the Germans are concerned, they seemed to find the French girls more interesting for screen purposes than their own blonde beauties. Whatever the reason may be, the fact remains that there are almost as many French girls in the German films as there are native women. This does not apply to the men. The great majority of male screen stars in Germany are Germans.

The passing of Mlle. Darfeul from Paris to Berlin is much deplored, for she was particularly a product of Paris. A gamin of Montmartre, she got her start in the cabarets of the hill, and presently found her way into the bigger revues. She appeared as an extra girl in a cabaret scene in one of the French pictures, and immediately after the "rushes," or preliminary projections of the picture, was signed on a contract by the astute manager of the company. Her next appearance was as a star. But unfortunately the manager had neglected to make the contract for more than a year, and when it expired she accepted the German offer.

Researchers Find a Speech-Making Bird

POLLY (who usually wants a cracker) must take a back seat. Heretofore the parrot has reigned supreme in the kingdom of feathered creatures as the peer of all linguists. Now come Dr. William M. Patterson and his associates, who are doing research work at Columbia University, with the claim that they have discovered the most voluble of all birds.

Dr. Patterson has the very bird in his possession. It is an African finch, the only one known to be in captivity in this country.

Even the most clever of parrots is restricted to a few phrases. The African finch, alleges Dr. Patterson, has a vocabulary of 500 words based on an alphabet of twenty-four letters and symbols. Many a child of three years is not so well equipped.

In discussing his remarkable finch from Africa, Dr. Patterson, incidentally, explodes some fallacies concerning birds. He says:

"Contrary to the popular belief, a bird does not sing a little song when it opens its beak. Instead, it makes a little speech. These speeches are not a repetition of the same word time after time, either. Take this little finch that I have, which I have been observing. He will say a word, and then he will not use the same word again for a week. It has been a most instructive and fascinating work to watch this little bird, which is a small gray creature about the size of a wren.

"My finch carries out a daily schedule that varies from day to day less than the routine of the average human being. The bird awakens at the same hour every morning, and it almost invariably makes the same morning speech, lasting fourteen seconds. The average word uttered by the bird takes him only seven-tenths of a second to utter, so that, I figure, his morning salutation to the world would be a paragraph of about twenty words. I wish it were possible to translate those twenty words and find out what it is that the finch cries out when he gets up for a new day."

It is the belief of Dr. Patterson that the finch, and all birds, in fact, build up their words in the same manner employed by primitive races.

"I have noticed a similarity between the word-building processes of the finch and those of the Hopi Indians. The bird speaks in prose comparable to Sanskrit, Chinese, the language of the Hopi Indians, and English."

Asked by what method he had recorded the various sounds that compose the bird's alphabet, Dr. Patterson admitted that it had been done entirely by ear. "Mechanical methods," he explained, "will not record the fine differences in pitch in the various notes used by the bird."

In the case of human beings and mammals generally, the voice is produced by the vibration of the vocal chords or membranes stretched on the firm cartilages of the larynx at the upper end of the windpipe. In birds, however, this is not the case. The vocal organ is at the lower end of the windpipe, where it forks to send a branch to each lung.

In general, three different sorts of vocal organs, or syrinx, may be distinguished. In the majority of birds the vocal equipment consists of the lower end of the windpipe, and the two branches. Several of the lowermost rings, of bony or cartilagenous construction, which compose the windpipe, fuse to form a more or less solid tube, while the uppermost rings, instead of being complete, are open, the gap being filled by membranes. It is the vibrations of these membranes which produce the voice of the bird.

Scientists Uncovering Ruins of Persepolis, Burned by Alexander to Humor the Cruel Thais

SALOME, dancing for Herod, asked to be rewarded by a gift of the head of St. John the Baptist. Thais, a Greek courtesan who was the favorite of Alexander the Great and accompanied him on his famous Asiatic campaign, dancing for Alexander, also asked for a reward, and when Alexander inquired what the reward was, she made the cruel request that he burn the city of Persepolis, the glory of the Persian world.

This is the legend, and it is a fact that Persepolis was destroyed by a tremendous conflagration, the traces of which are visible even today, in the ruins. Another version has it that it was said to have been done in revenge for the burning of the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus by the Persians. But whether this was the motive, or whether it was done to please the perverse fancy of Thais, the city was set afire, and much glory perished in the flames.

Today scientists are busy at work reclaiming that lost world of splendor from the ruins.

Persepolis was a very strong fortress. It had walls with a ditch, surmounted by other encircling walls which reached a height of fifty feet, and behind those a third wall. There was but one gate to which led a large double staircase, pronounced by the scientists to be one of the finest and most beautiful in the world. The staircase led to a main entrance hall, the outer and inner doors of which were guarded by pairs of colossi of old Assyrian pedigree, but far surpassing their ancestors in size.

Just now the work of the excavators is being concentrated upon the remains of the huge audience hall of Darius, consisting of a central room, the roof of which was supported by thirty-six columns, and three open porticos on three sides. The two front corners of the building were formed by a pair of solid towers constructed of sun-dried bricks. The sustaining wall of the audience hall is adorned with the representation of the great tribute procession of the various nations at the New Year's festival.

To the east lies the ruins of a second audience hall, that of Xerxes, called, after the hundred columns that supported the ceiling, "The Hall of the Hundred Columns." This structure was almost entirely destroyed by the fire.

Beyond the palace buildings lies an agglomeration of buildings devoted to the private life of the king. The first trace revealed to the scientists was that of a considerable mound, which had in the past been regarded as merely a great heap of debris and rubbish. It was found, on investigation, to consist of splinters of stone and other refuse of building material, filling a square of thick walls of sun-dried bricks, lined with a covering of enameled bricks.

The design of the structure, and the consideration that a royal residence of antiquity surely included some sort of a religious temple, makes it probable that this mound was once a sort of a fire-temple, resembling the temple towers of Babylonia.

Adjoining it, on different levels, and very cleverly communicating by highly ornamented stairways, there are the winter palace of Darius and the summer palace of Xerxes. The latter has a fine balcony, overlooking the lowest part of the terrace to the south, where there are plain traces of a kind of "hanging garden." This stretched to the edge of the terrace on the south, and on the east extended to a third palace. These smaller palaces all contain a main room similar to that of the audience halls, and, besides, a number of small rooms, baths and lavatories. They apparently served the daily life of the king.

On the steep slope of a rock behind the terrace are two royal tombs. A third one, left unfinished, lies to the south of the town. The three tombs belonged to the last of the Achaemenids. The tombs behind the palaces were separated from them, and from each other, by high walls. The walls also extend up to the mountain, and the enclosed area shows many traces of having been used for military guards. There have been found many fragments of broken pottery, bronze arrow-heads and other implements.

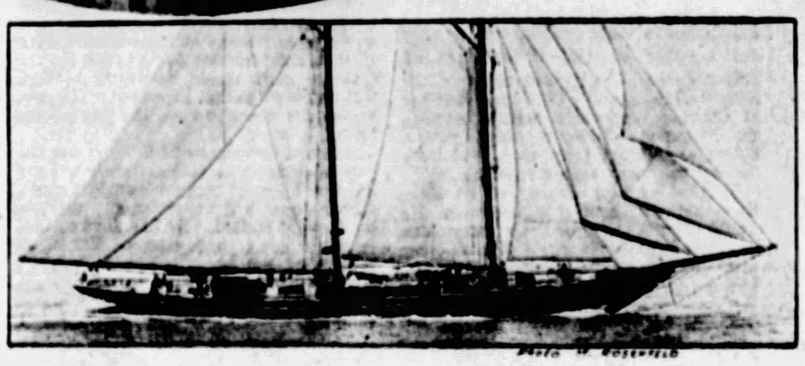
Newest Adventure of the Restless Young Mr. Stokes

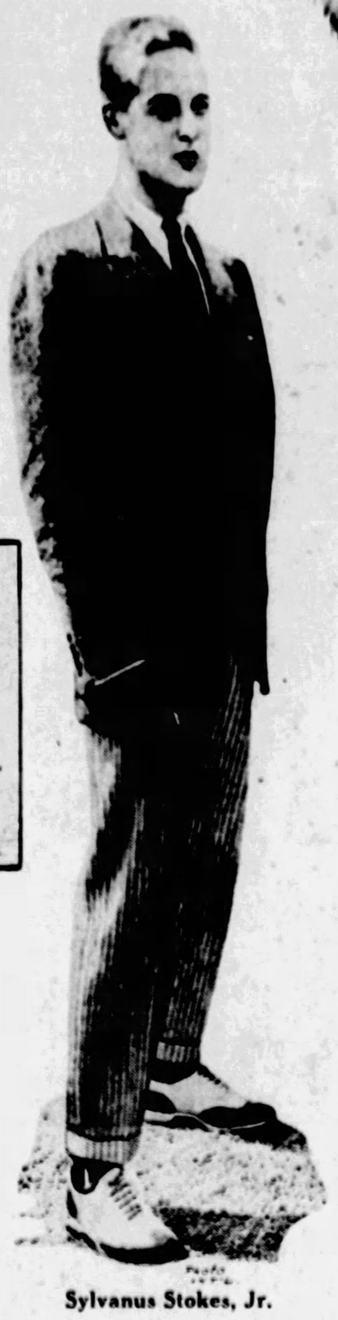
Bored by Society Life and a Fashionable Wife, Wrecked on His Yacht on the Florida Coast, Tired of Exploring the Indulgences and Pleasures of Gay Life the World Over, He Gets a Job as an "Extra" at Hollywood and Marries a Screen Star

Mrs. Margaret Fahnestock Stokes, in Her Costume as "Princess of the Pink Palace" at a Bal Masque. This Was Young Stokes' First Wife and She Divorced Him.

Miss "Patty" DuPont, Motion Picture Star—Young Stokes' Second Matrimonial Venture.



Mr. Stokes' 150-Foot Auxiliary Schooner Yacht, "Genesee," in Which He Was Wrecked on the Florida Coast.



Sylvanus Stokes, Jr.

YOUNG Sylvanus Stokes, Jr., dropped in at Hollywood recently and took the humble job of "extra" man at the first studio that would have him.

Then, in a few weeks, and without any previous film experience, he rose to the very top and became—well, not a star but the husband of one, Miss "Patty" Du Pont, which is almost as remarkable. However, he is a remarkable young man.

In New York, Washington and Southern society circles, where Sylvanus is well known, the name Stokes always seems to mean great wealth but nobody knows how much this particular Stokes really has. Sometimes he appears to be very rich indeed, sometimes not at all. He is a sort of intermittent millionaire.

"Syl's" society friends are not much surprised at his sudden promotion—they would hardly be at anything he did. In fact he promoted himself once before, by marriage, from a mere "extra" man at society dinners to an acknowledged social leader and did as much for the heiress he married, Miss Margaret Fahnestock. But that happy home and his two children became too serene for this restless, undomesticated male and he left it in search of further adventures.

He may find plenty of these with Miss Du Pont and she is probably due for some interesting experiences with this polished rolling stone she has taken for better or for worse and who is even now fitting out a large yacht for a protracted honeymoon cruise in the South Seas.

Sylvanus's grandfather was Allen Young Stokes, former president of the Richmond-Danville railway, now a part of the Southern. His grandmother was Mary Pickett, sister of General George E. Pickett, who distinguished himself at the Battle of Gettysburg. His father is a builder who amassed a fortune in New York, Washington and Annapolis. His mother was Minna Geesee, daughter of Fred Geesee, famous artist, who designed the Confederate money. "Syl," himself, was born in Richmond. With such a family tree his social standing was assured from the start.

He got out of college just in time to get into the war, which was acceptable because he understood that it was the greatest adventure in the world. Sylvanus loved the water and his father had turned over his yacht, the "Gretchen," to the Government. So young Stokes enlisted as a gob and received a berth on that yacht, converted into a sub-swatter. He imagined that this meant a berth in his own comfortable stateroom where he would sleep luxuriously between interesting fights with submarines. But the "Gretchen" never saw a submarine and never did anything interesting and "Syl" never saw the inside of his stateroom but slept in a folding bunk made of canvas and iron pipe, in the forepeak. He thought it a very poor war.

Every time the boat put in at Philadelphia the youth sought adventures in his big car. These kept him out so late that he was continually being disciplined. As a final punishment, he was demoted from gob to an orderly and attached to a Philadelphia hospital. This was a crushing blow because he had been living in hopes of transferance to aviation, where surely there would be some fun and excitement.

"I fetch and carry instruments and pans for the surgeons and nurses," he wrote home sadly. "It's like being a plumber's helper only less interesting and important."

They took his car away from him and kept the restless young man almost a prisoner within the hospital's guarded walls. It looked as if he had about as much hope for romance and adventure as he would in Sing Sing, but this remarkable person achieved it.

Miss Margaret Fahnestock, debutante daughter of Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock and one of America's greatest heiresses, visited the hospital to console some of Uncle Sam's patients. If Sylvanus had been lying romantically pale in one of the neat cots or even been one of the interesting and authoritative young surgeons, he might have had some chance to attract this golden girl. But an orderly, the lowest form of life in the place, carrying pails and pans, ordered about by nurses and not supposed to speak unless spoken to, it was almost unthinkable.

Nevertheless he got away with it. Somehow, in spite of all handicaps, he met, wooed, won and, after discharge permitted the groom to go to his bride, things began to happen that made society in Washington and New York sit up and take notice. Mr. and Mrs. Stokes spent money with a princely hand it it probably was mostly the bride's money. Adventurous men who marry heiresses usually do this, but in this case the bride got something in return for it.

Rich, stately, beautiful though she was, nevertheless, as a debutante, Miss Fahnestock had somehow missed fire. She was not the social sensation that she should have been. Her mother did not know how to stage-manage Margaret, but Sylvanus did. With a frankness that gave his mother-in-law the shock of her life, he told Mrs. Fahnestock that her daughter's clothes were "tacky" and proceeded to design them himself.

Some of these costumes were described in the society columns as "daring," others as "barbaric" and "terrific," but they always were described while those of others were not and that was the main thing. The elite came to the functions of the Stokeses and the Stokeses went to those of the elite. So well were things handled under the management of young Sylvanus that in a few years he and his wife were such acknowledged social leaders that they were commissioned by a sort of common consent to whittle down the overgrown list of who's who in Washington society to 300 names.

They were now at the very peak; they were rich, they had two pretty daughters—what more could heart desire? Mrs. Stokes was satisfied to rest on her oars and bask in her triumphs, but not her husband. When the adventurer has conquered his city, it no longer interests him. Sylvanus became uneasy, yearning for action, variety, novelty, adventure, and began roaming in wider and wider circles that took him all over the world.

Mrs. Stokes stood the embarrassment of an absentee husband as long as she could and then joined him on one of his circles as far as Paris, where she bought one of the quietest, most secret and most expensive divorces ever furnished by that obliging city. The original complaint charged the young husband with being "unsettled, unstable and continually moving about."

While the court realized that these are not very desirable characteristics in a husband, they are, perhaps, not unpardonable and so a few more conventional criticisms had to be thrown in, including cruelty and desertion. Then the decree was granted, allowing the husband to have the children three months of each year. No alimony was asked by this daughter of a family of bankers.

Free from all home ties, "Syl" fitted out his schooner yacht, the "Genesee," at New York for a cruise around the world. She had been built for William K. Vanderbilt and later owned by G. Sibley Watson, the capitalist and sportsman of Genesee Valley, N. Y. Sylvanus started down the coast in search of thrills and adventure, but nothing turned up until he was off Florida. Then they came with a vengeance.

One lazy afternoon, in the midst of a calm, the sky turned yellow, then black; a sudden gale whipped the sea into white caps and almost before they knew it, they were in the grip of a hurricane. The crew took in every sail, the hatches were battened down and they scudded under bare poles. So terrific was the storm that the "Genesee" could barely keep afloat until she drove ashore near Jupiter light. The owner and crew escaped with their lives, but nothing more.

Sylvanus stood on the shore and through the spray saw his $80,000 boat with its beautiful fittings, his guns, clothes, equipment and $10,000 worth of lead ballast, smash itself to pieces.

"What a nuisance!" he said. "It took me four months to fit her out." The Florida natives, who are used to sizing up millionaires, heard this remark with awe and decided that he must be a very rich man indeed. Mr. Stokes went back to Washington, got his tailors busy for a few weeks and then went around the world by steamers and trains instead.

Last year he was back in the capitol for a while, but society bored him as much as ever and he soon announced that he was on his way to China.

"This is a fine time to keep out of China," suggested a friend.

"No, it's the only place where there is any excitement," he replied. But on the way to the coast he read that the former Mrs. Stokes and his two children were in Los Angeles. Incidentally she had become the wife of Lieut. Benjamin Royal Holcombe of the U. S. N. and junior naval aide to President Coolidge. Though the navy moves its officers around a lot, her second husband seemed almost a stationary object compared to her first one. It occurred to Mr. Stokes to stop off and pay a formal call on his ex-wife and children and he did. After the call he thought he might as well look Hollywood over. Others had found adventure there.

California natives also think they know a millionaire when they see one, but they did not get the impression that Stokes was so very rich. Going from studio to studio, he was impressed by the "Keep out" signs and the general exclusiveness. These places seemed so much harder to get into than society that it piqued him. He finally did crash through by buying the card of a young "extra" man who had been hired as "atmosphere" for a society scene. Before Sylvanus had a chance to see much the director had him at work, and this young society blood made good, playing in the background what he is in real life. But to the director, he was neither better nor worse than a thousand other "extras" except that his clothes fitted a little better.

He was paid ten dollars a day for this work and thought it enough fun to warrant waiting till the next steamer. While he worked on and off, the press agents discovered him and sent out the news that Millionaire Stokes was working as an "extra." Hollywood wondered. He had an expensive car and yet somehow they doubted. Of course he was received socially and one day was introduced to "Patty" Du Pont, who, as everyone who goes to pictures knows, is pleasant to look upon.

"Are you in pictures?" asked Sylvanus, with an innocent face.

"I've starred in about twenty of them," replied Patty, looking at him in astonishment.

"Never heard of you," said Stokes. A deadly insult, if he had meant it.

"You are only an extra man," Miss Du Pont answered, "but what I know about you ——."

They both grinned and Patty took him out in her kitchen, where she made him some spaghetti, with Italian sauce. Now that home cooking is becoming obsolete among the middle classes, the picture stars and other wealthy people are picking it up as they do old furniture.

Next morning Mr. Sylvanus Stokes, Jr., cancelled his passage to China. He had found his adventure in Hollywood. Last month they were married and Miss Du Pont who was featured in "Foolish Wives" was featured again, in real life before the news cameras, though not necessarily as a foolish one.

When the reporters were interviewing the happy groom, he remarked that he was going to San Francisco to buy one of those big sailing vessels at the Mole, fit it up with engines, cold storage plant, lights and all the furnishings of a yacht and run down to the South Seas. It would only cost a mere $100,000.

The bride said she was going too. Evidently, if you marry a rolling stone, you must roll with him or lose him.

Poor Relatives of the Spendthrift Duke Suing to Save the Family Fortune

BERLIN, Feb. 2.

THE brother and sister of the former reigning Duke Joachim Albrecht of Anhalt—Prince Eugene of Anhalt and Baroness Marie Auguste von Loon, former wife of Prince Joachim, son of the ex-Kaiser—have brought a legal action in a move to save what was once one of the greatest fortunes in all Germany.

These poor relatives of the Duke, who have been more or less dependent upon his generosity, are suing for the appointment of a guardian. The Baroness says that a monthly allowance of 2,500 marks guaranteed to her by her brother has never been paid. Recently a Berlin art dealer, Franz Gurlitt, started suit against Joachim for half a million marks, and it is feared by the plaintiffs that this may be followed by a series of other actions at law which may entirely dissipate the once vast fortune of the house.

The threat of poverty, of course, does not in the slightest trouble the genial Duke, who lives in grandeur and magnificence in the haunted ancestral Dessau castle with his beautiful bride, a former actress, daughter of a theatrical manager. There, allege the plaintiffs, Joachim is surrounded by a crowd of amusing but low-born friends acquired since his marriage. This, in their opinion, is equivalent to saying that he is irresponsible almost to the point of insanity.

The Duke of Anhalt before the war was not merely a nobleman with a title, but the head of a state, one of the twenty of which the empire was made up. When the empire became a republic all the principalities and minor kingdoms had to discard their lords and princes, and Anhalt fell with the rest. The new states, however, treated their former rulers very liberally, leaving them their ancestral palaces, estates and other property, and permitting them to continue the use of their titles.

Thus the Duke of Anhalt found himself in possession of all the family palaces and possessions, the leader of society, but without the worries and cares of his former position. Being young, blond and good-looking he promptly set about forgetting his royal dignity and becoming one of the boys. His first popular move was to allow his ancestral home at Dessau to be used as a refuge for homeless people crowded out of the Ruhr Valley by the French occupation. Then he made a trip to the United States, the principal object of which, he admitted, "was to look over the lovely girls there."

Apparently they passed up the opportunity of making a captive of him, for he returned to Germany a bachelor. But not for long did he remain in that state. The young lady who won the title of duchess and the heart of the good-looking young duke was Fraulein Ottilie Strichrodt, the actress. The romance came about in the following manner:

Anhalt had not been quite satisfied with the settlement offered him by the new state. In order to shame the statesmen, he made a grand gesture of defeat and humility. He accepted a position—a minor managerial job—with the theatre formerly subsidized by his family.

Herr Strichrodt, father of Otillie, was director of the theatre. The ducal third assistant manager found his job surprisingly pleasant. He talked a great deal with Fraulein Ottilie about her art and other things, and the result was that in a very short time their engagement was announced. The news caused a storm of protest among the duke's relatives and the royal and aristocratic classes throughout Germany. These classes, who are still most important socially in Germany, expect the former head of a reigning house to be have with just as much dignity as when he was actually ruler.

As for his relatives, he rather liked to displease them. They had complained bitterly when he sold the family art treasures, including the famous "Portrait of a Lady" by Van der Weyd, which got him $300,000—enough to provide a glorious honeymoon for the Duke and his actress bride. The marriage had been remarkable in many ways; principally because of the conspicuous absence of all the royalty and nobility of Germany. On the other hand, there were present in full force most of the better-known actors, actresses, playwrights, sports and Bohemians. The Duke and his bride went to housekeeping in the various ducal palaces chief of which was Ballenstedt Castle.

Papa Strichrodt wanted a new theatre in Vienna, a bigger and better field than the little Anhalt capital. Immediately his ducal son-in-law cut down 3,000 acres of forest to provide him with the necessary funds. This was only one of many similar episodes which finally drove the relatives to the courts. The Baroness, sister of the Duke, was formerly the wife of the youngest son of the Kaiser, who committed suicide two years ago, immediately after his wife had divorced him. Since then she married Baron Von Loon, who is much below her in rank, but still a baron.

The republican system appears to have its advantages even for royalties, for under the old state of affairs it would have been impossible to bring the occupant of any throne to court for being crazy, or for being half crazy.

Prizes for "The Worst Gossip" and "The Most Foul-Mouthed Man" In Town

LOOKING over the circulation books of his newspaper, Paul A. Jones, editor of the Lyons (Kansas) News, decided that something would have to be done. The paper was not putting on the circulation warranted by what its editor thought was its general enterprise and excellence. Without adequate circulation there can be no adequate advertising. Without advertising—a cruel fact but true—a newspaper cannot exist, under the present scheme of things.

The problem, then, was to get more advertising by getting more circulation. How? Paul Jones racked his mind. What were the salient features of the town upon which to hinge a campaign of some sort; possibly a contest?

Regarding Lyons critically, Editor Jones realized there were two predominating evils. The women—not all of them, but a good many—were inveterate gossips. This is true of many small towns, where there are not too many outlets for energy or opportunities for amusement. The men were inclined to be Rabelasian in their anecdotes when they got together at their "stag" parties. Editor Jones had attended many of the Rotary Club, Kiwanis Club and Chamber of Commerce meetings, and in between the discussions of how to make Lyons a bigger and better town there had been perhaps too many such stories told.

Eureka! Editor Jones had an idea. He would run a contest in the paper. He would offer a prize for the worst woman gossip in Lyons. He would offer another prize for the most foul-mouthed man in Lyons. No sooner thought of than done. Without stopping to consider the possible consequences, Jones wrote out an announcement of the unique contest for the issue of the News that was ready to go to press.

For the woman adjudged by the votes of the people of Lyons as the worst gossip, Editor Jones offered a handsome tea set, an appropriate gift, he thought, inasmuch as most of the gossiping took place over the teacups in the Lyons homes. For the most foul-mouthed man the prize was to be a megaphone, so that any off-color stories might be heard by everybody in the room where they were told.

The contest, despite the fact that the intrinsic value of the prizes was inconsiderable, went over with a whoop. Votes began to come in in large numbers. People read the News every issue to see the names of the first candidates printed. But they were not published. Editor Jones, it was announced, would print no names until the winners were announced.

In sending in the names of any woman for the gossip prize, it was necessary, of course, to cite what particular bit of juicy gossip the woman had spread. In nominating for the "Foul-Mouthed Man" prize, it was necessary to relate the particular story told by the man whose name was sent in. Some of these stories were of such a nature that Jones began to fear that the mails would be denied to him. But nothing like that happened. The contest was a great success, the talk of the town.

After a few weeks of it, inquiries began to come in as to the date when the announcement of winners would be made. Editor Jones had not given any particular thought to that. He had figured that it would come in due time. But upon receipt of the inquiries he began to do some sober thinking.

The winner of the prize for being the worst woman gossip in Lyons might appreciate the tea set, but would she appreciate the title? Ditto for the winner of the contest to establish the most foul-mouthed man. It dawned on Editor Jones, with a clammy depression, that publication of the names of winners would be tantamount to inviting two extremely unpleasant libel suits. He was newspaper man enough to know that in a libel suit truth is by no means a defense; sometimes the greater the truth the greater the libel. It would likely be so in this case. Judgments against him would mean possibly the loss of his paper, or at least, the loss of his job.

The crisis was solved by an injunction suit which was mysteriously brought to prevent Editor Jones from publishing the names of the winners. Regretfully (so it was stated) he called the contest off, for certainly (he explained) he could not risk contempt of court. To those who charged that he himself had brought about the injunction suit Editor Jones deigned not to reply.

But the worst gossip in Lyons, and the most foul-mouthed man, are still veiled in anonymity.

Hangman Ellis, Demonstrating on the Stage How He Ties the Hands of a Prisoner Condemned to Death.

England's Hangman Unpopular As An Actor

LONDON, Feb. 4.

JOHN ELLIS was for twenty-four-years official hangman of Gravesend, England. When he first got the job it rather appealed to him. While he was not bloodthirsty in the least, there was a certain glamour about the job. It brought him into rather personal contact with some well known people. There was, for instance, Dr. Crippen, the famous murderer, whose deeds were related in great detail on the front pages of all the newspapers of the world.

Mr. Ellis officiated at the official demise of Dr. Crippen, and got his name into the papers with that of the hero of the occasion. The only difference was that Dr. Crippen could not read the newspaper accounts the following morning.

In his long and honorable career as hangman, Mr. Ellis executed a total of 203 persons, including one woman. By the time he had hanged his fifth or sixth criminal, the novelty of the thing had worn off. A soft-hearted man, Ellis grew to dislike cordially his task of ushering murderers to a better world. But he stuck to his job through habit.

Presently, however, he realized his role was an unpleasant one. People who pointed him out as the celebrated hangman of Gravesend seemed to do it with venom rather than with respect or admiration. It was unfair, but so it was. One day before breakfast he hanged six men at a time—all Sinn Feiners—and after that life was made rather miserable for him. It seemed that there were a lot of Sinn Fein sympathizers in the section, and they failed to take into account the fact that Ellis neither arrested nor condemned them.

After that Ellis determined to get out of the hangman business. Outside of the fact that it made him unpopular, there was no money in it. In twenty-four years a total of only 203 hangings, and the pay was only about $50 and expenses for each hanging. This was a total of about $10,000 in that period, an average of less than $500 a year. So he retired, but years of inactivity bored him, and recently he determined to go on the stage.

It took him several months of steady search to find a job as an actor. He succeeded finally because he located a play in which one of the characters was a hangman. The manager thought that because of his former position it might be a good stroke of showmanship to cast him for this role.

Upon the occasion of his debut in the part, Ellis was chagrined and amazed to find that he was hissed off the stage. There was a storm of protest at his appearance which resulted in his dismissal the next day.

Melting Steel By Radio

SCIENCE has unraveled another secret of the mysterious force called electricity. A method has been perfected whereby steel may be melted to a glowing red-white and molten state by radio.

This new invention, the first of its kind in the world, recently made its appearance in a steel mill at Sheffield, in England, where it is being used in the making of steel for the cutlery for which Sheffield is famous the world over. For over two hundred years there had been no appreciable change in the method of steel melting.

The wireless furnace, which looks like a plain wooden box, has a pot with capacity for 450 pounds. It is surrounded by an inch or two of sand, outside of which is a brass or copper coil with water running through it. Electricity is switched onto the coil, and at once a sharp staccato crackling starts. The steel, although there is no connection between it and the coil, becomes a faint red, then white, and slowly turns, within half an hour, to liquid. In another twenty minutes it is in a white-hot, molten state, ready to be poured into ingot moulds. In addition to the speed and efficiency of the new method, there is also another great advantage. By means of the radio furnace it has been demonstrated that the metal is free from sulphur and phosphorous. And with all the intense heat, the pot itself miraculously remains cold, and even the lid may be lifted with the bare hands.

Science to Search the Heavens With a Gigantic New Eye

The Mt. Wilson Observatory, in California, to Be Equipped With the Biggest Telescope Ever Projected, With Double the Power of the Largest Reflector Yet Made, in the Hope of Solving Many Important Mysteries of the Heavens

Where the Eye Perceives Only a Single Star (the Brilliant One in the Center of the Picture), A Photograph Taken Through a Telescope Reveals Thousands.

Compact Masses Which Appear to the Naked Eye Like Glittering Clouds Are Shown in the Telescopic Photograph to Contain Countless Thousands of Individual Stars.—From a Photograph Taken in the Donville Observatory, France.

A MONSTER telescope, of such size as to dwarf the largest instrument of the kind now existing, is planned by the Carnegie Institution for its astronomical observatory on the summit of Mt. Wilson, in southern California. It will be designed especially for photographing the stars, "star clusters" and spiral nebulae and for taking pictures of landscapes on the moon.

It will be a giant reflecting telescope, built on a principle altogether different from that of the familiar kind, which has an eyepiece at one end and an object glass at the other. At the bottom of its tube—the latter a mere skeleton for lightness—will be a concave mirror ten feet in diameter.

When observations are to be made a canvas jacket will be slid over the tube. The eyepiece will be near the top end of the tube, so that the sky watcher will be obliged to stand on an elevated platform. For making photographs a specially constructed camera will be connected to the eyepiece.

The reflecting telescope is a comparatively new invention. At a number of astronomical observatories in various parts of the world they have already replaced the older type, being found far superior. None of them, however, is at all comparable in size to the huge instrument contemplated for Mount Wilson.

In such a telescope the light rays, from a celestial object viewed, descend through the jacketed tube to its bottom, and, reflected in the form of a cone by the concave mirror, are focused upon a glass prism which turns them at right angles outward through the eyepiece to the eye of the observer, or into the camera that takes the place of a human eye.

The Mount Wilson observatory already possesses a reflecting telescope which is by far the largest in the world, though its mirror lens is not much more than half as big as the one that is to be made for the instrument planned. The mirror is 100 inches in diameter, thirteen inches thick, and weighs four and a half tons. It has a focal length of fifty feet, is dipped in molten silver every two weeks, and in the Summer time is kept cool by a refrigerating apparatus, lest high temperature affect its shape.

The ordinary and more familiar kind of sky-searching instrument is called a refracting telescope. It is limited in size by the difficulty of making a very big object lens that is free from bubbles or other flaws that would impair its optical efficiency. There is no such obstacle in the case of a mirror lens, which may have any number of flaws and yet be perfectly serviceable, the only requirement being that it shall be ground to a concavity mathematically accurate.

The mirror is not meant for light to pass through. It is simply a reflector, and for that purpose is coated with silver, not merely on the back, but all over its surface. The silver coating is what reflects the light rays that come down the tube. Care is taken that the metal shall be chemically pure. The coating soon tarnishes, and that is why the mirror is redipped every fortnight in a tank of molten silver.

A telescope of such size is an enormous affair and correspondingly heavy. Yet a small child may operate it, its great weight being balanced by a block of steel that serves as a counterweight.

Obviously, the larger the mirror the more light rays it will reflect. Hence the plan to build a telescope with a mirror nearly twice the size of the one now in use at Mount Wilson. It will be a giant eye for scanning the heavens, with a power of vision incomparably greater than that of any star-gazing instrument now in existence. By its means it is hoped to find out much that is now unknown about the make-up of the universe.

Not many people realize that all the stars, just as is the case with the earth, the star on which mankind lives, are moving through space with transcendent swiftness. Though the sky seems to present a spectacle of majestic serenity, in reality all the astral bodies are hurtling along at a speed in comparison with which the swiftest man-made artillery shell would seem to be hanging in the air. If the motions of the stars seem negligible to us, it is only because of the prodigious distance separating them from the earth, just as a man who is running very fast, when seen from a mountain top seems to be barely moving.

Accurate knowledge of the movements of the stars is a comparatively recent acquisition, made possible by the methods of modern astronomy. A series of researches, more and more thorough, undertaken for the most part by Americans, is daily furnishing science with data of so stupendous a nature that it is sometimes almost impossible for the mind to grasp it. It is hoped that the new great telescope will furnish a giant eye with which astronomers may sweep the heavens and be able to see and understand many things which are now perplexing mysteries.

Depending on its unaided efforts, the human eye can only perceive the sun, the moon, the stars and an occasional comet. When a man distinguishes the sun from the moon he is correct, but when he refers to all the brilliant specks sprinkled over the sky as "stars" he is being deceived by a trick of perspective into confusing planets and stars. To the naked eye planets differ from stars only in that they move more or less slowly in their revolutions around the sun. Stars, on the other hand, appear stationery.

Stars are, in reality, suns—that is, sources of light and heat—but they are so prodigiously far off as to be reduced to the aspect of twinkling points. Planets, which are relatively much nearer, are, like the earth, dull globes. They appear brilliant only because they reflect the sun's light. Similarly, the moon is luminous, and, seen from another planet, the earth would also appear brilliant.

Planets and stars look alike because, beyond a certain not very remote point, the eye fails to distinguish differences of distance. Thus the stars seem close together, whereas, in reality, immense abysses separate them from us and from each other. The following figures will give some idea of this immensity:

Around the sun, itself a star, eight principal planets, of which the earth is one, are in motion. In accordance with the laws of celestial mechanics, the nearer a star is to the one around which it moves, the greater is its speed. Thus, in order to accomplish its complete orbit within a year, the earth, which is situated 93,000,000 miles from the sun, moves through space at a speed of more than eighteen miles a second. But the planet

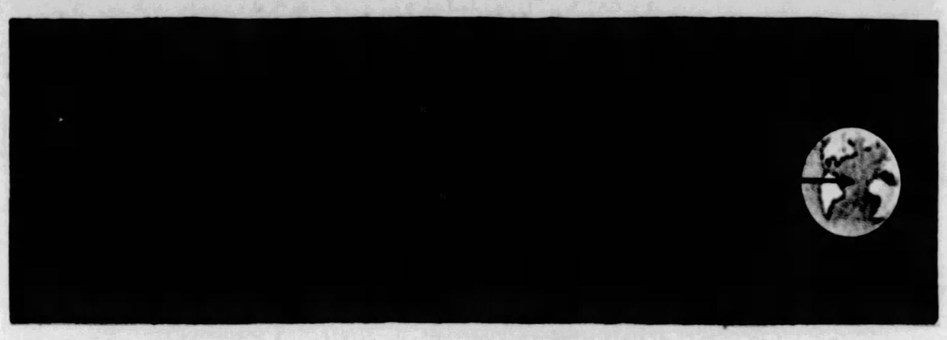

Diagram Showing the Comparative Distance Traveled in an Hour by an Artillery Shell and the Earth.

Uncovering the Casting of a Telescope Mirror in Washington Recently After Eight Months Slow Cooling in the Earth.

Mercury, which is only 36,000,000 miles from the sun, moves at a speed of twenty-nine miles a second. This is not only a much greater speed than the earth's, but also a record among known planets. Neptune is the most remote planet of the solar system (2,800,000,000 miles from the sun), and its speed of 200 miles a minute is relatively slow.

Comets also circle about the sun, but in orbits very different from those of the planets. When they happen to pass close to the sun they attain a speed of many hundreds of miles a second. By contrast, the moon in her orbit around the earth, at a distance of 239,000 miles, moves quite slowly. In order to contend with the earth's attraction she maintains a speed of 37 miles a minute, a speed which powder-driven projectiles often surpass.

Now it must not be thought that the circulations of stars and planets are effected with the same simplicity as those of runners moving eternally around a circular track. While the planets move around the sun, the sun itself is moving at a speed of about twelve miles a second, or nearly 400,000 miles a year, at the same time dragging along its complement of planets. Consequently, in order to retain their places, following the sun, and also accomplish their orbits, the planets do not really move in closed circles, but rather in more or less elongatel spirals. The direction of this course is oblique with reference to the plane of planetary orbits.

But, science asks, where are we going? Are we pursuing this fantastic course toward some ill-omened encounter with far-off stars? Such a fear need not be entertained; there is plenty of room for all.

The dimensions of the solar system appear enormous when we consider that our neighboring planets, which complete their courses in the same time as the earth, are hundreds or thousands of millions of miles away. And yet, compared with the remoteness of the stars, the preceding figures are insignificant. The solar system, which appears vast to us, in reality embraces a very small portion of the universe. All about it stretches a vast void which would have to be spanned before even the nearest stars could be encountered. It is futile to compute such distances in miles. They would have to be multiplied to such an extent that finally they would become meaningless.

It is better to use as the unit of measure the speed of light, which is diffused through space at a rate of 186,000 miles a second. And at such a speed a ray of light, which only takes eight minutes to travel from the sun to the earth, would take three years and eight months to traverse the distance between us and the star which is actually known to be nearest to the earth, a star of the Constellation of the Centaur. Or, perhaps, to give a clearer idea of the distance, an airplane traveling 125 miles an hour, would have to keep going about 20,000,000 years to accomplish such a flight.

All the other stars are even further away. And yet a few of them are considered fairly near (relatively, that is), since their light only takes from five to fifty years to reach the earth. Astonishing as these figures appear, they are still insignificant in comparison with other astronomical figures.

Stars which can be seen by the naked eye and whose apparent groupings (which are a mere trick of perspective) are labelled "constellations," constitute only a tiny part of the incredible celestrial army. Where the eye makes out one or two stars, the telescope or photographic plate discovers thousands, which are of lesser brilliance, either because they are smaller and really less brilliant, or because they are much further away. Also, whereas the unaided eye perceives only about 7,000 in the whole extent of the heavens, modern telescopic investigations have recorded many thousand millions.

In reality, Fathomless Space seems filled with a sort of luminous dust, whose every grain is a sun. The distribution of this incredible multitude is not uniform. In some sections the stars are grouped more densely than in others, forming what appear to be celestial masses, of which the chief is the Milky Way. The Milky Way, which is visible to the naked eye as a whitish path through the sky, is composed of millions and millions of suns. Some idea of its magnitude may be gathered from the accompanying photograph, which only represents a tiny part of the entire expanse.

From seeing the stars grouped about us in fixed places, Science reasons that we are at the heart of a universe, or immense collection of astral bodies, of which our sun is one of the least important members. Roughly speaking, this Universe must be ring-shaped, and we must occupy a position quite near its center. The dimensions of this vast throng of stars are not yet exactly known, but it is known that a ray of light from a star on the outside edge of the ring must take many thousands of years to reach us.

The myriad suns composing our Universe are hurtling through space at a speed for the most part exceeding thirty miles a second, and sometimes as great as 200 miles a second. Some are moving toward us, others moving away. And of all this movement we perceive nothing, blinded by vastness. Thousands of years of constant motion are necessary before changes are effected in the disposition of constellations sufficient to attract our attention.

Although these few facts are enough to give us dizzy thoughts of infinity, they are reduced to insignificance when considered beside the distances separating us from the most remote stars, which are probably outside of our Universe, at the extreme limit of our comprehension.

Pale lights show, in the depths of the Infinite, the Nebulae of which many are spiral shaped. Of these spiral nebulae at least a million are already known, and all point to the belief that there are other universes besides our own. Our eyes perceive the light of their million suns as a pale haze. Their distance from us is terrifying, the light from one of them, the Great Nebula of the Constellation of Andromeda, taking more than a million years to reach us. Some of these systems appear to be moving through space in their entirety at a speed of more than 600 miles a second.

Bearing all this in mind the contemplation of these myriad stars in the depths of darkness is indeed dazzling. Their rays have been journeying towards us through innumerable years and centuries. From this it is plain that we do not, and never will, see the surrounding sky as it really is. When looking at the heavens the rays of many stars appear to strike the eye simultaneously. This is true enough, but the rays are by no means contemporary. For example, the rays of one star have taken ten years to reach the earth, of another 50 years, of others hundreds of years.

While the rays of light are traveling toward the earth the stars themselves are moving. Thus, when the rays reach us the stars no longer occupy the same position they did when the rays started. In other words, we never see the stars in their real positions in space. Thus, while we may still be receiving the light of some which have long been extinct, the light of others may not yet have reached us. But the image of the sky, as an image, remains, in spite of all, the greatest and most sublime which the eye of man can gaze upon.

While astronomers have made great progress in recent years in the study of the heavens, they have been limited by the power of their telescopes. It is exceedingly difficult, and a slow and expensive thing, to mould a perfect astronomical lens, or great mirror, and thus it has been that the experts of Europe have produced the large and important astronomical instruments. At last, however, under the direction of the scientists of the United States Bureau of Standards, in Washington, a large optical glass has recently been cast to use as a mirror in a reflecting telescope.

Eight months ago, after much painstaking preparation, 3,500 pounds of mixture was heated to a temperature of 2,400 degrees Fahrenheit, and poured into a mould in the ground in Washington. For one week the temperature was slowly lowered until it reached 1,112 degrees Fahrenheit. The glass was held at this point for about four days to allow the temperature of the mass and furnace to become uniform throughout. At 1,112 degrees this particular kind of glass is quite rigid, and, yet, sufficiently viscous to yield to cooling stresses without danger of cracking.

From time to time since last May the mass in the mould was cooled slowly until on January 16, the great casting had reached room temperature. And then after a little more than eight months, in the presence of a group of distinguished scientists and officials of the Bureau of Standards, the mould was opened and it was found to contain a perfect casting. This initial effort to make a 70-inch mirror will encourage American manufacturers to larger undertakings and relieve American astronomers from the necessity of going abroad for their great instruments.

Killing Rats the Life Work of the Two Scientific Girl "Pied Pipers"

THE last occupation the average woman would choose would be that of rat catcher. The traditional dislike of women for the rodent species has not diminished with the centuries. It is most interesting, therefore, to note that the two best known rat catchers in the world are women.

They are not ordinary rat catchers. They are in partnership with science. They are the only really scientific Pied Pipers, or, at least, so they claim. The two young women who have embraced this odd trade are Miss Helen Caldwell, of Huntington, W. Va., and Miss Evelyn Wagar, of Minneapolis, Minn.

First, they were both consumed with a great ambition. They wanted to travel, to see the world. Being unable to join the navy, they decided on making their fortunes. How? By catching rats. This all began some five years ago, when both girls were going to college, Miss Caldwell at the University of West Virginia and Miss Wagar at the University of Minnesota.

Chance drew them together during a holiday period. They discussed their mutual desire for world travel, and it was Miss Caldwell who suggested that the one field of endeavor not too overcrowded was that of rat catching. Their chemistry courses at college stood them in good stead, and they organized. Within a short time they were launched in their trade. Today they stand pre-eminent in it. They guarantee results.

Their most recent campaign was in Mexico, Mo., a town of some 8,000 people. The town had for some time been annoyed by a large number of rats, and when the civic authorities heard of the results the Misses Caldwell and Wagar were getting elsewhere, they sent for them.

After signing a contract with them, Mayor J. H. Lane issued a proclamation asking all the people of the town to cooperate with the feminine Pied Pipers. Helen and Evelyn started to work.

Barium carbonate was placed on bait in and around sheds, basements, sewers and other haunts of rats. Complete extermination is not always accomplished, but invariably the cost of a campaign is made up for a community through decreasing depredations of rats.

Government experts have estimated that every rat costs a community quite a sum of money in a year. This cost is in the consumption of food, damage to property and in communicating disease.

In Mexico the young women first conferred with shopkeepers, instructed them how to use the poison and then went about helping mix and place it where it would do the most good for the human beings—or the most damage for the rats.

The poison causes extreme thirst and the rats nearly always run from their hiding places in search of water, and therefore do not cause trouble by dying under floors and between walls.

"The rat has no virtues," said Miss Caldwell to business men of Mexico in her opening speech of the campaign there. "It annually eats about $1.82 worth of food products.

"The rat is a disease carrier, particularly of bubonic plague and maladies which can be conveyed by fleas, with which rats always are infested.

"In the central part of the United States the gray rat predominates. In Europe the black rat is more numerous.

"One pair of rats, if unmolested for three years, will have 395,000 descendants."

Despite the activity of rat catchers in the United States, there has been no appreciable decrease in the pest population, because of the aforementioned remarkable fecundity of the rodents. They breed four or five times a year, and come ten to twenty in a litter. According to the United States Public Health Service, the progeny of one pair of rats in five years, if there were no deaths, would be almost 100,000,000,000. Without doubt, rats would conquer the world were it not for certain diseases to which they are susceptible.

Much more effective than any campaign for rat catching is the matter of rat-proofing of docks. It is along the river front that rats are most numerous. Rat-proofing of docks is rather an expensive measure, but it is excellent economics, because the rats destroy not only the goods stored on the docks, but the structure of the docks themselves.

The secret of rat-proofing, in a word, is to give the rat no place to go. Solid bulkheads, of cement instead of wood, will do the trick. Cleaning up rubbish heaps, repairing broken walls and maintaining a generally sanitary condition are highly important.

Bubonic plague is not the only disease carried by these pests. Rats are frequently infected with intestinal parasites, the tapeworm in particular. Blood tests of rodents have also disclosed the presence of trichina, and scientists believe that rats have been a considerable factor in transmitting this infection to hogs, whence it comes to man.

Investigations conducted by prominent medics broached the theory that the rat is responsible for that dreadful disease, infantile paralysis. The physicians were led to this conclusion after they had made a comparative study of infantile paralysis and bubonic plague, and discovered remarkable points of resemblance in the spread of these diseases. Several well authenticated cases were established in which children who had played with dead rats were taken sick with infantile paralysis, and after an epidemic of that disease had broken out in one New England town, an investigator saw on a river bank rats hardly able to crawl about because of paralysis of the hind legs.

Smallest Government in the World Afraid Somebody Will Steal It

PARIS, Feb. 4.

THE Republic of Andorra, in North Italy, is the smallest in the world. The taxes are so small in this free republic that they amount to practically nothing. Andorra has no navy, no army, and not even a police force. Its population could be hidden away on Manhattan Island in the United States and not even be noticed.

Yet Andorra is not too small to have its troubles in matters international. Andorra in the past has been free and integral because it was considered that it was not worth fighting for. But the Andorrans feel differently about it. They are proud of their tiny land, which goes back in history to the time of Charlemagne, who, when he vanquished the Moors with the help of the Andorrans, gave them the privilege of independent government.

The feudal prince of Andorra happens to be M. Domergue, the President of France. Andorra recently appealed to him because Spain had taken over its mail service. When a nation has neither army, navy nor constabulary, it hates to give up its mail service. And further, Andorra, being close to Spain, fears its large cousin. The taking over of the mails, the people of Andorra fear, is but a preliminary to eventual conquest of their diminutive realm. This means the loss of their freedom, which is very precious to them indeed. They regard it as highly as do the Swiss, the Scotch and the nearby free republic of San Marino.

To Paris, then, went a deputation of Andorrans to plead their case with the French President, who, by virtue of being a successor of Henry IV, as head of the French state, shares with the Bishop of Urgel, in Spain, the titular sovereignty over the wee Pyrennean republic, which otherwise enjoys complete independence.

Formerly the postal service of Andorra was assured by France, which tactfully appointed home folks as postmen. When the distribution of the mails was taken over by Spain, Spaniards were appointed as mailmen, and Andorra trembled for its freedom. To the world at large it might be a small enough matter, but to Andorra it was a move most significant. It may mean, the members of the deputation told President Doumergue, that there is going to be a censorship on their incoming and outgoing mail, for in Spain the postal censorship is always most severe.

When a state has not even a police force, and has two big neighbors, its diplomats must be exceedingly diplomatic. In making their complaint at Paris, the Andorrans were very tactful and discreet. The chances are that the visit of the deputation to Paris caused smiles. France and Spain both disavow the slightest wish to invade the sovereignty of the little valley republic, comprising only 175 square miles and occupied by herdsmen. Its heights command no fortifications and it would be of no value in war.

San Marino, on the contrary, perched on its rock and overlooking Rimini, is considered to have military value. As a matter of fact, this little republic still considers itself in a state of war with Austria for things that happened in the time of Garibaldi. It was in San Marino after his retreat following the fall of Rome in 1849, that the liberator disbanded his redshirts.

Since medieval times San Marino has felt the tread of the horses of the Malatestas, the Alberoni, the Borgias and the Dukes of Urbino. Napoleon, as a sporting gesture, refused to disturb its autonomy. Even Mussolini has done nothing to wound the feelings of the hillmen of San Marino, who are all Italian in race and sentiment anyhow. So San Marino issues its pretty stamps and makes revenue out of the philatelists, proceeding happily without such incidents as those which fret the Andorrans today.

Andorra resented the fact that her delegates were not invited to the great Peace Conference following the World War. Honduras and Panama were invited, her people pointed out—therefore why not Andorra? Its 5,000 inhabitants (who could all be comfortably housed in half a dozen New York hotels) considered it an affront to their dignity.

But the present situation is much graver. It approaches a crisis, even if the rest of the world refuses to see it in that light. The deputation to Paris, discreet and restrained though their petition was, want it to be understood that Andorra is, now and always, for Andorrans.

Devoured Alive by Starving Cats

BUCHAREST, Feb. 2.

ON the outskirts of Jassy in Rumania is a large house which was once occupied by Anton Petresco and his little granddaughter, Anna, a child of ten years. Old Petresco was reputed one of the wealthiest men in that section, but nobody envied his pretty little granddaughter, for he was a miser and gave her less to spend than many poorer children were given.

She was not allowed to play with the children of the neighborhood, for, despite her tender years, the job of housekeeper of the old manse was her job. The old man was a little mad, too. He had a constant fear of robbery, and he had equipped his house with special locks which only he knew how to open. There was one on every window and door. Each night, before retiring, he would close these locks.

Then there was another hobby of the old man which caused a great deal of talk. He loved cats. He particularly liked the blue Russian felines from Bessarabia, and had accumulated forty of them. His miserliness seemed to stop when it came to his cats. They were fed, some said, a great deal more opulently than old Petresco fed either himself or little Anna.

Old Anton rarely left the big house, and upon Anna devolved the task of taking the tribe of Bessarabian cats out for an airing. They were not like the housecats of the other people of the village. They had about them a wild, ferocious look, and nobody ventured to pet them.

There came a day when Anna was not seen on her customary promenade near the house, with the forty cats. It was not noticed particularly, but later people remembered. For several weeks neither Anna, old Anton nor the cats were seen. People were inclined to keep away from the Petresco house, and it was only the accidental visit of a government tax collector which revealed what had happened.

Unable to get a response to his repeated calls, he summoned others, and an entrance was forced. The minute the door was open, out bounded a troupe of skinny, half-famished, wild-eyed cats.

All that remained of Petresco and his granddaughter were two skeletons.

It is supposed that the old man had suffered a paralytic stroke, and that he and Anna, unable to open the doors or windows, had been attacked by the cats.

Smallest Monkey Weighs 3½ Ounces

SOME time ago George C. Zweibel, owner of an animal shop in Hollywood, California, introduced for the special benefit of his movie clients a line of small marmosets, which are a particularly small breed of South American monkey. "Buddy," a five-year-old marmoset in the Zweibel collection, weighed only five and a half ounces, and Zweibel claimed he was the smallest monkey of any species in the world.

The claim was challenged the other day by Mrs. A. G. Tower, of London, whose marmoset pet, Teeney, weighs only three and a half ounces, and sleeps in a teacup.

Teeney is just as odd-looking as he is small. He comes from a family variously distributed from southern Mexico to southern Brazil.

Marmosets are small, delicately formed creatures, with hairless faces, eyes that are large and bright. They have very long tails. Their hair is long, abundant and silky.

Squirrel-like in many ways, marmosets have longer and stronger limbs behind than in front. They travel about in small groups, being arboreal in their habits, and feed upon insects and fruit. In their breeding habits they differ from their monkey cousins, giving birth to two or three young ones at a time, instead of one. The general body color is brownish-tawny, with red and black variations on the back.

Barrels of Money—But It Doesn't Buy Her Happiness

Delphine Dodge, Heiress to the Great Automobile Fortune, Leaves Her Husband, as Her Brother's Wife Also Found That Love and Great Wealth Often Do Not Go Together

The Magnificent $2,000,000 Yacht Delphine, Named for Delphine Dodge.

The Dodge Florida Home, One of the Show Places at Palm Beach.

Mrs. Horace E. Dodge, Delphine's Mother, and Hugh Dillman, the Actor, Whom She Married.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. R. Cromwell on the Sands at Palm Beach.

Mrs Horace E. Dodge, Junior, and Her Two Children. She Divorced Her Husband.

IF Miss Delphine Dodge had been a working girl, the wife, perhaps, of an elevator operator whose wages were about $150 a month, she would probably be singing merrily as she cooked her husband's dinner over the little gas stove and listening with happy anticipation for her husband's footsteps on the tenement stairs. But Delphine Dodge had the fortune to be born to millions—the daughter of the late Horace E. Dodge, one of the multi-millionaire automobile makers.

With one of the finest yachts ever built at her service, with one of the great show places at Palm Beach to spend her Winters, and with unlimited means to reach out and help herself to everything that money will buy, Miss Delphine Dodge has separated from her husband, J. H. R. Cromwell, and has learned that there is one thing in this world which money will not buy—a happy home.

That money will not buy a boy or girl a happy home but is more likely to spoil it for them seems to be unusually well demonstrated in the Dodge family. Delphine's brother, young Horace E. Dodge, made the same unpleasant discovery, losing his wife, his happiness, his two children and $1,000,000 cash. Curiously enough the only two Dodges who ever had any experience with poverty and work are the two who have managed to remain happy though married.

One of these is the widow of the late Horace E. Dodge, Sr., Mrs. Hugh Dillman who, everybody thought, was making a great mistake when she married an impecunious actor so much younger than herself. Mrs. Dillman is one of the richest women in the world, but she was not born rich nor did she marry money. Horace Dodge was a blacksmith when she married him and she had to hustle as hard as he did when they first started out. With that experience, in spite of her wealth, she knows how to have a happy home with her moneyless husband, though he is no matrimonial genius because he failed to get along with his first wife, Marjorie Rambeau.

The other Dodge who has gotten away with matrimony is John Duval Dodge, Mrs. Dillman's nephew. Young John D. clashed with his father, the late John F. Dodge, who was Mrs. Dillman's brother-in-law and equal partner with his brother Horace. Old John may or may not have suspected that he was really doing his son a great kindness when he cut him off in the will with only $150 a month. Anyway, he did it, and young John had to go to work. Also, when he married he had to marry a girl undazzled by any delusions about wealth and the fun it would bring her. And John is still working and still married and glad of it.

Delphine Dodge did not marry in careless haste. She knew exactly what she wanted in a husband, found one that fitted the bill as if made to order and yet, now that she has him, he won't do. Though the daughter of a self-made man, Miss Dodge had been brought up in luxurious elegance and realized that for her a satisfactory mate must be a man to the manner born who would fit naturally into the surroundings which her inherited millions would supply.

There were other specifications. He must be tall, handsome, fascinating to all other women, but devoted and attentive to her, and, besides that, it would be nice if he had inherited money of his own, and therefore would not let business interfere with pleasure, as her father persisted in doing to the end of his life.

James H. R. Cromwell, son of the late Oliver Eaton Cromwell, of one of New York's oldest and most fashionable families, is all of these things and when Miss Dodge married him, seven years ago, everyone agreed that both parties had done very well indeed. They were both so popular with everyone else among the elite of New York, Philadelphia and Florida that it seemed impossible that they could become unpopular with each other, but they managed it somehow.

The two had similar tastes in amusements, which was fortunate in a pair of lives devoted to nothing else. Both were devout speed boat enthusiasts, racing against everybody and sometimes against each other. Last year Delphine won the President's cup in the Washington motor boat regatta and received it from President Coolidge himself. If one makes a list of all the things that should make for happiness, this couple had them and all the known sources of discord seemed to be absent.

When a poor man and wife get on each other's nerves in a cramped flat, it is a serious matter. His job won't let him run off to Florida or the Riviera for a few weeks and he can't send her because he hasn't the price and she must stay home and cook his dinner. Either of the Cromwells could afford to go anywhere, she cooked no dinners and they lived in great mansions not only with separate bedrooms but with separate suites. Even on board their great ocean-going yacht, "Delphine," there was plenty of room for separate accommodations so that either one could escape seeing very much of the other. Yet now Delphine decides that none of their places is big enough to hold her and the man she picked for a life partner.

In spite of both having money and there being more of it than they really knew what to do with they succeeded in clashing even over that. This came out the other day in a suit Mr. Cromwell brought against the 502 Park Ave. Corporation, in New York and sixteen other defendants, one of which was his own wife. He charged that he had been led into leasing the apartment at that address and then subleasing to the various tenants on unfavorable terms. He wished to have all the leases cancelled including that of Delphine who occupies the three top floors.

Both members of the dissolving Cromwell partnership have gone back to their mothers who, though they understand the art of staying married indefinitely, can't seem to explain it to their children. Mrs. Cromwell is now relating her sorrows to Mrs. Dillman in that lady's $4,000,000 Palm Beach palace which used to be the Joshua Cosden mansion and is one of the show places of the state.

Right nearby is another hard place to be heartbroken in, the great estate of El Mira Sol where Mr. Cromwell's mother, the present Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury of Philadelphia, is consoling her unhappy son. Mother birds can teach their young how to fly but human mothers can't tell their children how to marry without getting hurt.

Delphine's brother, Horace E., managed even worse. His matrimonial venture was a year shorter and cost him a million alimony, while his sister's won't cost anything because only men pay alimony. Horace only had a million and a half, but that seems to have been enough to give his wife, Lois Knowlson, exaggerated ideas of the happiness that she ought to get from marriage with a millionaire. He had money enough to have devoted every day of his life to paying attention to his wife, but he disappointed her by going into the business of manufacturing motor boats.

Probably he thought it would not take much of his time, but business, especially a new one, is a jealous mistress and, as poor Lois complained in her divorce suit, he was often away three weeks at a time. When he came back and she rebuked him, he was quick-tempered and talked back. Once he actually walked right out of one of her parties. For this cruel and inhuman treatment she started divorce proceedings.

But Dodge proved his love for his wife by making heroic efforts to conciliate her. He made promises to reform and give up his business if it annoyed her and never to talk back. She finally consented to return, but first he had to sign an agreement that in case she ever felt justified in divorcing him, she would have the custody of the two children and a million dollars alimony, two-thirds of all he had, in one lump sum.

As one of his friends said at the time, young Dodge must have loved his wife "immoderately" to take such a chance. He took it and promptly lost. The next time he went to Paris on business, he read in the papers that his wife was divorcing him in Detroit. He sent a frantic cable and followed it himself on the next steamer. By the time he reached Detroit she was on her way to Honolulu. Again he followed and by using fast trains and aeroplanes and pursuading the steamship company to hold her ship, the Wilhelmina, for two hours and a half in the harbor of San Francisco, he caught up with the runaway and made the trip to Hawaii with her, pleading all the way.

But it did him no good. She knew what she wanted and got it—divorce and that million alimony. A few months later a young army aviator, Lieut. C. L. Williams, crashed at sea in his plane off Honolulu and was drowned. Lois, in Detroit, put on deep mourning and hurried out to the islands to spend some of the Dodge alimony in searching for the aviator's body. From this it would seem that she had preferred a penniless flyer to a man with a million and a half and the prospects of many more millions.

His mother, Mrs. Dillman, seems to have recognized that her son is hopelessly ignorant of the technique of getting along with a wife because it is reported that her will cuts him off from those millions if he remarries. Meanwhile, Lois took her million and tried it again, marrying Lieut. Benjamin Franklin Manning, of the U. S. Coast Artillery, in September of last year. But, alas, she got even less happiness for her money than any of the Dodges, for on November 12, before the honeymoon was over, the newly-weds separated.

Young John Duval Dodge married while his expectations of wealth were only that beggarly $150 a month and he had to hustle to support his wife. She was not bedazzled by the Dodge millions because John had none to dazzle her with. However, after his father died, he sued the estate and finally received a settlement said to have netted him between a million and a million and a half, about as much as unhappy Cousin Horace had.

But this pair of Dodges had had their taste of poverty and they did not let this windfall wreck their happiness. The young couple helped themselves to the good things of this world. Mrs. Dodge appeared in the clothes and diamonds that every girl yearns for and her husband took to high power cars, but they did not lose their heads.

How much they cared for each other was revealed when John got into serious trouble, some time ago. With others as gay as himself he took a girl for a ride instead of straight to her home as he had promised, and the girl jumped and hurt herself. For this breach of the laws of speed and etiquette, the judge sentenced John to five days in the Detroit House of Correction where he wore prison garb and had to work on the coal pile.

Here was a fine chance for his wife to be sorry for herself at the disgrace and get a divorce. Horace, who had to pay a million, had never done anything like that to Lois and the Cromwells have no such thing on each other. But Mrs. Dodge stood by her husband in court and with tearful eyes tried to soften the judge. She even clung to the bars of his cell until they had to put her out, almost by force.

Some wives, knowing that their husband could not possibly intrude for five days, would have felt justified in further punishing him by employing the time with a safe little flirtation. Mrs. Dodge, as she was led away from the jail, was asked what she was going to do.

"Do?" she sobbed. "Why just wait and live for the time John gets free from his troubles."

That sounds as if John Duval Dodge had some skill in the fine art of getting along with a wife.

ROME, Italy, Feb. 2.

ADVICES from the city of Pisa reveal the distressing fact that the recent rains and floods of exceptional severity throughout Italy have affected the foundations of the famous Leaning Tower. Water was found to be oozing up from the foundation, and examination revealed the fact that a spring of water upon which the tower was built has become active again. A pump has been installed and mechanics are kept on duty to see that this pump is in operation day and night.

The recent floods, which started the old spring into activity again, have softened the soil and the tower has begun to tip further from the perpendicular than ever before. A committee has been appointed by the Italian Government to consider what steps should be taken to make any further decline impossible. It has been suggested that some system of "freezing up" the stagnant water in the foundations might be applied, or that a general hardening of the soil might be accomplished by injections of cement.

Parts of the inside walls near the foundation are crumbling, and some of the pillars have developed cracks which, in cases, have been temporarily strengthened with steel bands. The bells in the tower are not allowed to be rung any longer lest their swinging weights jar and perhaps damage the unstable pillars and masonry.

The historic Leaning Tower of Pisa is 179 feet in height, and is estimated to weigh more than 200,000 tons. It was from the upper platform of the tower that Galileo dropped a couple of chunks of different weights to prove that ten pounds does not fall ten times faster than one pound, as scientists of his time said they did. And one of the narrow-minded disputants announced that he would not believe Galileo's experiment even if he saw it.

At the present moment the tower is thought to be about eighteen or twenty feet from the perpendicular, but it is difficult to make measurements and determine with exactness just how much the tower is out of plumb.

Every building has a central point. In a perfect cube the central point would be the exact middle on a line perpendicular with the ground. As the structure is tipped to one side, this central point or "center of gravity" moves in the direction the structure is tipped. When the line perpendicular to the ground and passing through the center of gravity falls outside the base of the structure—the building falls.

As far back as 1817, more than 100 years ago, two Englishmen—Cresy and Taylor—made careful measurements of the tower and found that it was then more than twelve feet out of plumb. If it is now twenty feet out of plumb, the tower has tipped about eight feet in 100 years. Unless this can be stopped, the tower is doomed to fall. As soon as the center of gravity is outside of the base of the tower, it must inevitably tumble.

While tourists from all parts of the world are concerned over what seems to be the impending destruction of one of the architectural and engineering masterpieces of all time, the threatened disaster has plunged the usually placid people of the city of Pisa into impenetrable gloom. The situation is not unlike that in Venice, some twenty-two years ago, when the equally famous bell tower or Campanile of St. Mark's Cathedral fell.

At that time the humbler Venetians, who thought of the Campanile as an immemorial part of their glorious town, saw in its collapse a portent of doom for all of them. Bells were rung, and special masses said for a week after it crumbled. Shops were closed for days. Panic took possession of the people.

There is a difference between the Campanile of St. Mark's and the Leaning Tower, however. When the Campanile fell, able engineers and architects gathered up the fragments of its storied walls and pillars, and rebuilt it. The new Campanile was dedicated in 1912, and the bells rang out again. Travelers find the new bell tower almost as interesting as the old.

But Pisa's tower is one of the wonders of the world, not only in an architectural but an engineering way, and if or when it falls, it is doubtful that even the clever builders of today will be able to replace it with anything one-half as beautiful—anything that will justify the comment of a celebrated English writer, who speaks of the present tower as "a unique treasure, leaning like a lily in the wind, and as strange as the horn of a unicorn."

The Leaning Tower is inseparably bound up with the history of Pisa, particularly with the glamorous story of the town when it was a free city, and carried on commerce, encouraged the arts, and made war and peace at its own discretion. The bells in the tower, now silent, in other days called the faithful to vespers, warned of the rise of the River Arno, announced the birth of a prince or the winning of a battle, summoned the men-at-arms to muster to fight against the Florentines.

Pisa is in Tuscany, and on low-lying ground, and the tower, cathedral and most other celebrated buildings are on land no higher than the river bank. Every year for centuries there has been a flood of greater or less magnitude during Tuscany's rainy season, which usually comes late in August or early in September. In 1922 there were the heaviest rains in some years, and at that time the spring under the tower came to life again and became troublesome, and the soil under the Leaning Tower began to granulate and settle. This is not strange, when it is remembered that the foundations of this glorious structure of 200,000 tons of solid marble are not more than ten feet deep.

In common with the rest of southern Europe, Italy was visited by exceptionally heavy rains last September, and while no loss of life was reported from Pisa, there was considerable property loss, even in the business section, which is some distance on the land side of the cathedral and other ecclesiastical buildings. While no measurements as to the leaning angle of the tower were made after the rains and floods of last year—at least none was announced—there is reason to suspect that it has fallen away from its center of gravity faster in the last few months than ever before.

The history of the building of the Leaning Tower of Pisa is one full of romantic interest, reflecting the strange and fascinating life the gifted Italians of the free cities lived when nothing mattered so much as beauty. There is cause to believe that it was built to answer the artistic challenge of Venice, Florence and other rival towns, which were going in for the building of magnificent towers, particularly bell towers for their cathedrals.

It was some time before 1174 that a native architect, Bonanno, began the tower, and carried it up to forty feet in the air. Then he abandoned the project and sought other commissions, and there is an argument that is exactly that old as to whether he gave up because the undertaking no longer appealed to him or because he noticed that the foundations he had planned were not sturdy enough ,and the marble arches and pillars were already starting to weaken.

For just fifty years the project was ignored, while Pisan architects devoted themselves to easier problems, and people wondered whether Bonanno had really been a madman or a genius. Then, in 1234, one Benenato ignored the warnings of other architects and engineers, and carried the tower up another story, making four in all. Something occurred when he had added the extra 25,000 or 30,000 tons of stone to the burden resting on the ten-foot-deep foundations, and he, too, sought other fields.

For a time the undertaking languished, but some years later the merchant princes of Pisa, determined they would have their tower even if they had to defy the law of gravity, imported William of Innsbruck, and told him to proceed. The alien builder struck out boldly. He added a fifth story, then a sixth. Then William of Innsbruck, like his predecessors, reconsidered his ambition to achieve what many said was the impossible, and took himself off the scene.

A century passed, and Tommaso Pisano was engaged for a fat fee to finish the job, the supposition being that he would add further stories, but Tommaso was cannier than those who had gone before him. After considering all the angles of his task, he announced that the foundations would not support a taller building. He declared there was nothing for it but to top the structure with a bell tower, hang the bells, and stake the artistic reputation of the Pisans on the result. That was what was done.

Among architects there has long been a dispute as to the exact manner in which the Leaning Tower of Pisa came to lean, and another as to how the various architects who built their ideas and aspirations into it were affected by its unconventional and un-towerlike behavior.

A few advance the theory that it was meant to fall away from its natural center of gravity. One clever French writer wrote an amusing story to the effect that Bonanno, the original designer, was a hunchback, and keenly sensitive to ridicule, and meant his tower, like himself, to be deformed. Another has held that a patriotic architect meant the lean in the tower to remind his fellow townsmen that the power of Pisa was falling, and she was to become a weakling in the sisterhood of the free cities of Italy. Most writers, however, agree that neither Bonanno nor any of his successors meant the tower to lean in the first place, and they further agree that all the architects knew before they were through with it that the foundations under them were weak, and the lean would become more pronounced as the years went by.

Probably the spring that is making all the trouble now has always been under the tower. Pisans say that its presence was first noted after one of the earthquakes that rocked Tuscany in the Middle Ages, and that it is only in the last few years that it has turned into a slow, steady flow, undermining and washing away. Since the September rains, as has been stated, it has been more active than ever in its history, and the special commission to plan a way to offset its effects is the result. The engineers seem to be divided into two schools, one in favor of "freezing up" the stagnant water with chemicals, the other in favor of hardening the soil by an injection of cement, but nothing has been achieved along either line yet. Which may or may not suggest that the engineers, for all their ostensible optimism, are not so sure that either solution will be the lasting one.

In their extremity, they cannot refer to the Venice disaster for comparison, for in that case the problem was not exactly the same. There was no spring, although the rains had undoubtedly done some damage to the base of the Venetian bell tower. Scientists of twenty years ago said earthquakes were to blame. Engineers of today, though, say that the base of the Campanile of St. Mark's was not big enough, nor the foundations deep or strong enough, to support indefinitely the load placed upon them by the architect-engineers of centuries ago.

In case the Leaning Tower does fall, the Pisans will be at another disadvantage that the Venetians did not face in rebuilding their Campanile. The Campanile was made of bricks, and although there were more than 1,000,000 bricks in it, most of them were undamaged after the collapse, and were mortared back into the new bell tower. But the Leaning Tower of Pisa is of marble, and if it falls the marble will probably be shattered. And that kind of marble cannot be reproduced, save by the weathering of the centuries. Admirers of the Pisa tower maintain that it looks like a tower of ivory, so much have wind and rain mellowed and softened and tinted the sturdy marble walls.

Aside from their sentimental interest in the tower, which, with the argument over its origin, has kept the city well known, even since the decay of its commercial splendor, there is a very practical side to the gloom of the Pisans over the prospect of its collapse. Pisa is a city of less than 50,000, and not the most prosperous in Italy, and the revenue that is left annually by tourists, who go there for no other purpose than to see the tower and meditate on how it got that way, is quite considerable.

Couldn't Bear to Guillotine Such a Romantic Murderer

Young Gaston Guyot Boasted of 737 Feminine Conquests and as He Had Cruelly Killed Only One of All These Sweethearts the President of France Orders His Life Spared

PARIS, Feb. 3.

GASTON GUYOT, a wealthy young Frenchman, murdered his sweetheart, for which he was duly convicted and sentenced to have his head cut off by the guillotine.

But sentimental people have protested so vigorously that President Doumergue of France has just commuted his sentence to life imprisonment and is expected to follow it soon with a full pardon.

The Guyot case was as celebrated in France as the Ruth Snyder case in America and, if such a thing is possible, even more cold-blooded and abominable. In the United States husband-murder is quite common and rarely is much of anything done about it. In France, husband-murder is almost unheard of; it just isn't done.

On the other hand, there is a long list of distinguished wife-murderers whom the French courts have not the heart to punish. It is merely a little difference in custom and sentimentality, just as in China they use white for mourning, instead of black.

Once in a while, in America, a wife like Ruth Snyder bungles the job and murders her husband so brutally and shamelessly that not even the flimsiest pretense of justification can be invented by the sentimentalists to gloss over the facts and she has to take the consequences.

In France, too, the same thing occasionally happens to a wife-murderer and Guyot's was one of those exceptions. The prisoner's guilt was so obvious and the crimes so atrocious that the judge felt obliged to go against custom and tradition and impose the death sentence. But the Guyot case had one astonishing feature that the Snyder case lacked and which no American criminal lawyer would have dreamed of introducing as a defense. Guyot's attorneys, however, played it as a trump card, which saved his life, made him a hero and probably will win him his liberty before long.

Gaston Guyot owes his good fortune to the fact that he kept a diary of all his love conquests, beginning with his first boyhood affair up to and including his last one with Marie Louise Beulaguet, whose body he tried to burn in a haystack. According to this unique document, 737 separate and distinct women have succumbed to his blandishments. It did not help him much at the trial because the first reaction of the court and public to that staggering total was disbelief. Several noted Parisian rakes gave their expert opinion that it was impossible. But that diary gave names, dates and places which have been painstakingly verified. It is authentic.

This probably would not have helped an American murderer much, it more likely would have hurt him. But in France it made Guyot a hero. A wave of admiration swept the country and sentimentalists began sending flowers to his cell and bombarding President Doumergue with petitions to save their sheik of sheiks.

No living Frenchman pretends to have equalled Guyot's figures and though there are certain legends about Solomon, Attila and other ancients, there is no historic evidance to show that anyone ever surpassed this amazing "he-vamp." His is probably a world's record, possibly a record for all time. So the French sentimentalists set up a clamor that the champion sheik of the world must not die, but he freed as soon as possible that he may run his figures up to 1,000 or better.

It is easy to ridicule French sentimentality, but what would happen on this side of the water if Babe Ruth were sitting in the shadow of the electric chair? We are scandalized because the French condone wife-murder, but they are scandalized because we condone husband-murder.

One night, more than a year ago, two mounted gendarmes patrolling the Paris-Midi Railroad, at a point called "The Guarded Death," saw a large haystack, in a distant field, burst into flames. They rode into the field and having no water tried to put it out by pulling the stack to pieces.

Presently, through the smoke and flames, a human arm seemed to reach out toward them. Seizing it, they drew forth the body of a very pretty 21-year-old girl which proved to have been burned only on one side. Examination revealed bruises from a struggle and that death had been caused by strangulation.

The body was brought to Paris and soon identified as that of Marie Louise Beulaguet, sweetheart of Gaston Guyot, the millionaire grain speculator, with whom she was known to have gone for a ride the night of the murder. As Guyot was not to be found the police suspected that he had gone for help to his father, the respected Mayor of his native town of Louan. Sure enough the father and son met in Paris and Gaston was arrested.

The case was almost a year in coming to trial because it was necessary to investigate the deaths of Guyot's two wives who were supposed to have shot themselves, the burning of some granaries on which he collected heavy insurance, the robbery of a train and a few other mysterious events in which he figured.

The prosecution built up an impregnable case against the young millionaire, who denied killing his wives, but admitted strangling the girl he had taken from a telephone job in Louan to a "love-nest" in Paris. Yes, he had strangled her to death, but it had been an accident. The court room tittered at this improbability, but he soon had them spellbound as he dramatically went into the details of that fatal love affair and showed how he happened to choke her a little longer and a little harder than he meant to.

Guyot, Chained to a French Policeman, Re-enacts the Killing of Pretty Marie at the Spot Where Her Body Was Burned in the Farmer's Haystack.

Photograph of the Farmer's Field Where Guyot Tried to Burn His Sweetheart's Body in a Haystack. The Three Men in the Middle Foreground Are Standing Over the Spot Where the Haystack Stood.

This affair had started soon after the "suicide" of his second wife, and to refresh his memory, Guyot managed to get that love-diary into the evidence. With tears, he told the courtroom how deeply he and "Malou," as he sometimes called her, had loved each other for nearly five years, right up to the tragedy. But alas, he had not been able to keep entirely true to her during all that long time, and again, alas, she had been so jealous.

The prosecuting attorney asked how many times he had been untrue. Instantly out came that diary and the defendant read off the names and addresses of a dozen women and was still going strong when he was told that it was enough. The judge asked to look at the diary and soon after declared a recess.

When court was reopened again, Guyot explained that on account of Marie's unfortunate jealousy she made disagreeable scenes every time she heard of one of these affairs. Finally he came to the night of the tragedy. It seems that this was one of those times and she was real cross over her latest rival. Guyot offered to look her up in his diary, where she was number 732. They told him that he needn't bother, but the spectators had caught that number.

To appease the jealous Marie he had taken her to dinner at Fontainebleau Forest, but in spite of that she remained somewhat difficult so he decided to take her back to Paris instead of going on to Havre for the night, as she wished. As he turned the car in the direction of Paris she slapped his face and when he did not stop she continued to slap him until he hit her with his fist.

At this point the prisoner displayed his full dramatic talent and held his courtroom audience enthralled as he described and vividly acted out for them the death scene.

"Then she began to act like mad," he cried, "raining blows on my face. I told Marie she was an imbecile, raining blows on my face when I was driving forty miles an hour. And when she kept on striking me, I seized her by the throat with my right hand and kept on driving with my left. She shrieked, but I maintained my hold for about ten seconds merely to subdue her. But when I let go, I found to my horror that she was dead. I had strangled her."

The defendant paused to weep copiously at the thought of this "accident" to his beloved. Then he explained that he feared that the authorities might not understand that it was an accident caused by trying to do two things at the same time. A man driving a car ought not to hug, kiss or choke a girl.

While he was wondering how to dispose of her body he saw a field full of haystacks. Carrying the body to the nearest one he hollowed out a resting place for it, set fire to the stack and drove away, hoping that the remains would be burned beyond identification. Medical testimony riddled this story. It showed that the victim had been badly beaten and then throttled, not for ten seconds but several minutes and by someone who was attending to that and nothing else. Also there was a mass of evidence to prove there had been no quarrel that day but that it had been a cold-blooded, premeditated murder.

Mlle. Marie Louise Beulaguet, the Pretty French Telephone Girl and Latest Victim of the French Millionaire Murderer.

"I told Marie she was an imbecile, raining blows on my face when I was driving at forty miles an hour. Finally I seized her by the throat with my right hand and choked her a little as a warning while continuing to drive with my left hand. She shrieked—but when I let go I found to my horror that she was dead. I had strangled her."—Young Guyot's Statement in Court Which Nobody Believed.

Guyot was invited to explain how his two wives died. This was easy enough, except that it made him cry again. If tears are any sign, this tender-hearted murderer still loves the entire list of 737 sweethearts and wives, though he has to look in his book to remember most of them.

He claimed that his first wife, Mme. Augusta Guyot, committed suicide with a pistol because she thought she had a cancer, in which the autopsy proved she was mistaken. The weapon she used had been a present from her husband, which, of course, made that bereaved gentleman's grief extra hard to bear.

One might suppose that after such a sad result, he would not have given his second bride, Mme. Georgette Barbichon Guyot, also a pistol but he did. And what did she do, he tearfully told the court, but kill herself with it because she was ashamed to confess that she had gambled away 12,000 francs he had given her.

The prosecution had a different version. They maintained that when Guyot was tired of his wives and had spent their fortunes on the other 735, he made a suicide pact with them. In each case the police found newspapers in the death chamber telling of the train robbery, the granary burnings and other of his crimes. They alleged that he dramatically confessed everything he had done, informing the women that the police were closing in on him and that ruin and disgrace were only a few hours away. Death was the only escape and as he had done it all for love of them, he asked them to die with him.

There is no doubt that Guyot has a way with him with women, for even his wealth would hardly account for 737 conquests. Twice his trick worked and, of course, after they had removed themselves he did not keep his end of the bargain. But the third time, when he tried it on Marie after she had become a bore and a nuisance, worse than a wife, it failed. Marie was of less sensitive fibre and she was jealous of the others and though she may have accepted the idea she refused his polite offer of ladies first.

With his confession she knew enough to have sent him to prison for a long term. She had him just where she wanted him. There would be no more names added to that diary. She could do anything to him—even make him marry her. It was for that reason that his fingers silenced her voice forever. If the two gendarmes had not been nearby and arrived so promptly he might have gotten away with it.

If this cheerful murderer is set free to go and sin some more, as everyone expects, it will be interesting to see what sort of woman will wish to be number 738 in that diary.

The Charming Jacqueline Forzane, Who Married Nyegaard, the Dashing Aviator.

Mlle. Marthe Dalbane.

WHEN Prince Leon Radziwill, one of the wealthiest and most fashionable men in Europe, was found stretched lifeless on his canopied bed in Monte Carlo recently, the secret police discovered that Mlle. Marthe Dalbane had been the last person to see him alive. Scandals are not relished in the world's most famous gambling resort; Mlle. Dalbane was escorted to the frontier and told never to return.

Crossing the border into France, the French police took up the investigation of this remarkable adventuress, known as the "Death Flower," and her startling record reveals her association with twelve extraordinary tragedies:

Prince Radziwill, controlling owner of the Monte Carlo gambling institution, drugged and dead.

Jean Gobron, famous aviator and son of French Senator, becomes a drug maniac and dies mysteriously in the war.

Hendrik Nyegaard, another aviator and reputed son of the King of Denmark, dead after committing insane acts in Marthe's society.

PARIS, February 4.

AS related last week, Prince Leon Radziwill's mysterious death in the royal suite of the Nouvel Hotel de Paris at Monte Carlo caused the French authorities to issue a general order for the arrest of Marthe Dalbane, known as the "Death Flower."

For ten years the "Death Flower's" dossier in the keeping of Instruction Judge Bacquart, of the Tribunal of the Seine, containing the known facts of the various tragedies in which the blond beauty has figured mysteriously, has accumulated. Yet all that the Surete's detectives and the Judge himself could draw from it was that they were in the presence of an entirely new sort of mystery.

The police have repeatedly stated that they do not believe that the "Death Flower" had intentionally caused the death of the series of wealthy admirers, culminating in that of Prince Radziwill. In this case, for instance, it seems evident that Marthe had everything to lose and nothing to gain by his untimely end. It was the beginning of what promised to be a most profitable association from which she might hope to salt away a fortune in jewels and money. At the same time, as sweetheart of this influential and very rich lord of Monte Carlo, she would enjoy a power almost equal to that of royalty.

Surely she should have been the last one to wish it, and yet somehow when she stepped into the Prince's apartment death stepped in with her and ended the romance in the middle of its first party. Police are not superstitious persons and they scout the popular notion that the tragedies are the result of a curse laid upon the "Death Flower" by a woman who considered herself wronged by Marthe.

The French police say that if Mlle. Dalbane is a "death carrier," as they express it, the thing must happen by natural means. It is conceivable that some criminal has found a way to use her as an unwilling and unsuspecting vehicle, or it may be wrapped up in the curious psychology of drugs, especially morphine.

The dossier briefly mentions the woman's early life and origin. Her real name is Marthe Claude Crowes and she was born in Fourmies, a sooty little town of Picardy, where each morning almost the entire male population disappears into the bowels of the earth, to emerge at sundown, like black ants, covered with coal dust.

Among these miners was Gideon Crowes, an Englishman who had settled there and married Marie Dalbane, a Frenchwoman. Like most miners, he raised a large family, swarthy, sooty-looking, and evidently destined to be miners and wives of miners—all but one, little Marthe. She was a blonde of the most pronounced Nordic type, with big light blue eyes and the peaches and cream complexion sometimes to be found in England.

The inside of Marthe's head may have originally been much like that of her humble and serious-minded brothers and sisters. If so the conspicuous outside spoiled the inside before she was six years old. By that time she was too good for her family and town, and did not care who knew it. She told everyone that she would never be a miner's wife—hers was to be a "career."

The spoiling was not the fault of her family and neighbors, who did their best to keep the vain little creature in her place. It was done by well-meaning tourists passing through the grimy, sordid village and astonished at the sight of this perfect little white lily growing in the soot. They stopped, petted and flattered the child, and, noting the surly looks of its honest but humble parents, decided they were unworthy of such a little angel. They said as much to each other in the little angel's hearing, and the little angel believed them.

The family, however, made Marthe do her share of the housework, most annoying to a little girl who intended to live in luxury and be waited on by numerous servants. At the age of fifteen she had no assets toward the gilded life except her striking blond beauty and such airs and graces as she had copied from the great ladies who had stopped their cars to flatter her. Somehow she must learn how to eat, talk, wear clothes properly and to sing, dance and a few other accomplishments. Then came her first affair, a rather calculating romance.

By some accident one of those broken-down noblemen with whom the Continent swarms found himself in Fourmies. Twenty-four hours after he laid eyes on Marthe the two were on their way to Paris together. The stranger had neither youth nor wealth to offer. About all he could hope to provide was three meals and a place to sleep in. But he could, and did, train her in manners suited to the elegant life for which she aimed.

Many of these down-at-the-heels members of noble families make a living by training cocottes of peasant origin to appear as if they were to the manner born, and for this the needy gentlemen are paid by the lesson, like any other kind of tutor. Marthe had no money, so she gave him her fresh youth and beauty. The girl was a studious pupil, but within a year there was trouble. The nobleman had reason to be jealous of a teacher of singing and dancing and told Marthe that she must choose between them.

From a teacher's point of view the pupil's reply was a credit to him, but he did not like it. With the elegant hauteur of a duchess, the miner's daughter informed her moth-eaten nobleman that she would choose the other man, and she did. While learning to sing and dance Marthe found time to pick up a smattering of sculpture and painting, also without expense, from close association with a couple of artists. At the age of seventeen the young woman had quite a showy little education, a small job in a cabaret, but no jewels, money or much in the way of clothes.

One evening a rich young South American diplomat entered her restaurant and fell in love with Marthe at first sight. In reply to his passionate avowals she suggested marriage, not with the faintest idea that he would accept, but just to make conversation. To her amazement, he agreed, and they were married the next day—just as soon as she could make sure that he was really rich.

Marthe could not understand why he had taken her at her face value, without looking into her past. On the honeymoon she found out. The young man was one of the rapidly growing army of drug addicts which was soon to overspread most of the French leisure class.

During her married life of less than a year Marthe learned one more lesson, which she considered of great importance. A man under the influence of certain drugs is much more susceptible to the lures of a woman. He may do most anything—toss jewels into her lap, or even marry her; also, if jealous, kill her.

She studied the varying effects of the different drugs. For instance, opium, smoked in a pipe, makes the smoker dreamy and quietly introspective, interested chiefly in watching the visions in his own befuddled brain. In that condition there is no danger that he will do violence to his fair companion from jealousy or any other motive. But, alas, he cannot very well be led into marriage, or even into writing a check. It is too much trouble.

Morphine, an opium derivative, when injected under the skin has the opposite effect, producing a violent intoxication of the nerves, impelling the subject to action. At certain stages of drug intoxication morphine fiends exhibit sudden and insane cruelty. They not only commit murder for whimsical reasons, but mothers have been known to jab the morphine needle into their own babies. A moment later their cruelty may change into equally extreme generosity.

The bride soon realized that to induce admirers to take morphine would be playing with dynamite, and yet if a woman used it with skill she might blast untold wealth from them. Therefore, studious and ambitious Marthe improved her short married life by adding drugs to her rapidly growing practical education.

Of course, nobody is so ignorant as not to have heard of the terrors of drug slavery. Therefore, a woman could hardly hope to seduce even the most foolish man into the belief that the experiment was safe unless she set him the example of taking some herself. So Marthe became a drug taker—not as most people do, in the crazy hope of getting an extra kick out of life, but with the cold-blooded intention of profiting by it.

Most of the professional sirens of the Continent, and even in England, have taken up drugs for the same reason now, but Marthe is entitled to the dubious honor of being one of the pioneers in that effective scheme for unlocking the masculine pocketbook.

Marthe not only emerged from matrimony with added knowledge and a handsome cash alimony settlement, but also a large circle of rather important friends such as hover around a diplomat. She was now established socially, and, to keep herself in circulation, she opened a studio in the Rue St. Senoch, where she made some curious little statuettes which are said to be not entirely without artistic merit, though there were rumors that she received a little assistance from more experienced artists. This was well enough, but it had been done before and failed to attract as much attention as the young woman desired.

At that time, before the war, aviation was only a dangerous and expensive toy, a game that did not appeal to women. But Marthe observed that it was conducted only by millionaires and those who were backed by millionaires, and, therefore, just the right place for Marthe, especially as there seemed to be no feminine rivals. Just as soon as she could have some special costumes designed Mlle. Dalbane announced herself as an "aviation girl," and was always to be seen at the flying field of Issy-les-Moulineaux.

Of course, other women were accustomed to come out and view some of the little hops of a few thousand feet, which were enough to win a medal and a champagne dinner in those pre-war days. But Marthe plunged in all over. She not only brought with her special costumes, but she brushed up on aviation lingo. She knew the difference between four cylinders and four cycle and the significance of volplane and angle of incidence. This got her into the parties. Other girls were quick to follow, but she was first and profited most. Also she brought something else—drugs.

It may not be fair to lay the blame of what has been the curse of European aviation on Marthe's white shoulders. It is probable that some were already taking the stuff before she arrived, and, if not, that some one else would have started them, for it was a peculiarly fertile field. Aviation meant days of preparation for a moment of intense nervous and physical activity and risk. That drugs might nerve a man up to that brief ordeal seemed plausible, but the sport was soon to grow into the grim game of air fighting, where nothing could have been much more fatal than the drug habit.

When Lindbergh flew the Atlantic he was astonished to learn that he was supposed to have kept himself going on the drug caffein. It was a natural enough error. The French people had the idea that drugs go with flying in other nations as well as their own, and, reading that Lindbergh's chief problem would be to keep awake, they jumped to the conclusion that he would fortify himself with the sleep-chasing caffein.

Marthe, at the flying fields of Paris, Rheims, Chalons and Monte Carlo, met such wealthy men as Emile Dubonnet, of the distilling family; Bunau-Varilla, nephew of the proprietor of the newspaper Matin; Henri Rougier, and Gabriel Voisin, the automobile manufacturer. This was just as Marthe had hoped, and her prosperity was visible in the form of jewels. The papers called her the aviation mascot and frequently printed her pictures arrayed in smart special costumes. But there was one annoying feature. Some jealous woman had fastened on her a most undesirable nickname that did not go with mascot.

Who first named Marthe the "Death Flower" is not known, and it seems to have grown on her slowly at this time and only in aviation circles. Some disagreeable feminine statistician seems to have pointed out an extra high death rate among her intimate friends. Not until the deaths of Gobron and Nye-

"Nyegaard arose, holding his glass of wine, and finally fastened his gaze on Marthe. 'Death is coming in at the door. See, he is bowing to all the ladies, but especially to my charming Marthe. However, he has not come to see any of you, even her. His business is with me.

gaard, two celebrated flyers, did the public learn of that ominous name.

When the war came France looked for great things from young Jean Gobron, son of the distinguished Senator from the Ardennes. He was one of the most skilled and daring of the airmen, and yet he crashed and was killed for no visible reason. Two of his brother flyers were in a machine close by and said that he seemed to be in a trance and to just let himself go. It was reported that he had taken a loaded morphine needle with him and had actually used it in the air.

Then came a story which Marthe says was circulated through the malice of a jealous rival. It told that Marthe had first introduced him to drugs, which she denies. The part that later interested the police turns on a contribution by the widow of a Paris sporting editor who was attending an aviation meet at Rheims just before the war. According to the widow, who, like most married women, had no great love for the "Death Flower," her husband occupied the hotel room next to that of Gobron the night before the meet, and was kept awake by the loud talk and clinking of glasses heard through the connecting door.

Suddenly there came to his ears a hoarse cry and the sound of a fall. The editor knocked on the door and asked what was wrong. A woman's voice calmly replied that everything was lovely in there. But he heard moans which were soon drowned out by the woman's laughter.

"Stop that laughing," he ordered, but it kept on until he finally pushed open the door. There, according to the widow's story, he saw young Gobron, unconscious and still faintly moaning, on the floor, with an empty hypodermic beside him. Perched on a chair and dressed in lacy pajamas of black, which accented the creamy white skin beneath, sat the "Death Flower," regarding the man on the floor with a peculiar smile.

Seeing the glasses and empty champagne bottles about the room, the editor picked up the syringe and asked if it had contained morphine. The statuesque beauty in the chair nodded without lifting her eyes from Gobron.

"Don't you know that morphine on top of alcohol is more than likely to be fatal?" the frightened editor is said to have asked, and the woman is said to have nodded again.

"Then what did you do it for?" the editor is said to have demanded, and the woman is said to have replied:

"I didn't do it. He took it himself."

Gobron did not die at that time. Youth and an iron constitution and prompt medical help barely pulled him through. His family took charge with a firm hand, weaning the young man away from both the woman and the drugs.

But the war took him out of their hands and on a furlough in Paris Gobron again met the "Death Flower," who says that on that occasion neither of them took drugs. There is no evidence to dispute her, but when the flyer returned to his airdrome he not only brought his needle but ether.

It is only fair to mention that at least the ether cannot be blamed reasonably on her or any other woman. Breathing its fumes causes a quick and violent intoxication, but no inclination to be liberal with money or jewels. Some man must have taught him that.

When Hendrik Nyegaard died in much the same manner the ears of Paris were ready for another "Death Flower" story, and they were not disappointed. Nyegaard was a tall, blond, Viking type of young man who was generally believed to be a son of King Christian of Denmark. This may have been due to the fact that he was liberally supplied with money from the Danish Embassy and because the Danish Ambassador went to extraordinary pains to extricate the youth from the results of his wild dissipations.

With this money and influence it was not surprising that Marthe Dalbane thought him worthy of her favor in those pre-war aviation parties. At his death Parisian revellers recalled with a shudder the last of those parties which the young Dane and the "Death Flower" attended as partners.

It was at the historic Cafe de Paris, the men mostly of great wealth and the women celebrated for their beauty and jewels. Most of these ladies were sirens, like Marthe, but, as often happens in such gatherings in Europe, there were also quite a few perfectly respectable wives with their husbands. Such oil and water of matrimony would not mix very well on this side of the ocean, but they manage it over there somehow.

This evening all were fortifying themselves with various wines and liqueurs and some also with drugs. It has been said that drugs were first taken up to help people endure the misery of listening to after-dinner speakers. But this cannot be true; otherwise Americans would be ten times worse addicts than Europeans. One of the party was young Nyegaard, who not only drank as much as anyone, but from time to time was seen to leave the table for a few moments, returning with ever more noticeable evidence of some drug.

After a period of gloomy silence, which he broke only by an occasional word to the "Death Flower," who seemed to be ridiculing his glumness, he jumped onto his chair, waved an empty champagne goblet and, in a ringing voice, demanded attention. They listened with tolerant amusement at his wild boastings, but some were a little alarmed at the mad glare in his ice-blue eye.

Nyegaard said that he was the greatest aviator in the world, that he could do anything on wings that any man could do, and more. When nobody challenged this statement, which was not very far from the truth, he boasted that he was a better man than anybody, with any weapon or his bare hands.

Tactfully they let that assertion pass also and nobody disputed him when he stated that he was not afraid of death in any form. Taking their cue from his fair companion, the other revellers smiled at him good naturedly, but he did not like it. He paused and frowning looked from one smiling face to another, finally fastening his gaze on Marthe.

'You don't believe," he said. "Watch! Death is coming to the door. See, he is bowing to all the ladies, but especially to my charming Marthe. However, he has not come to see any of you, even her. His business is with me.

"I am ready, Death."

Their grins disappeared and there were cries of dismay. To everyone's consternation, he raised the empty goblet to his lips, bit off pieces of the glass and chewed them up between his teeth. Through a bloody froth they heard him invite Death to take him.

Guests and waiters threw themselves on the mad man, pried open his mouth and fished out such pieces of the glass as they could. But he swallowed some and was a long time in the hospital.

Jean Gobron, Famous Aviator and Son of Senator Gobron, of the Ardennes, Who Was Killed in the War.

This was a good thing, because he came out free from drugs, chastened and rational. There appeared no family to rein him in, but this was done for him by Jacqueline Forzane, one of the most beautiful and talented of French moving picture actresses. She married the wild viking and kept him clear of both drugs and the "Death Flower." But, as in Gobron's case, this healthy influence was broken by the war.

It was the same story of meeting the "Death Flower" on furlough, in Paris, the sudden resumption of drugs, crazy flying and death. At that time is said to have occurred the curse which, if it did nothing else, fastened the name of "Death Flower" on Marthe firmly in the public mind.

The generally accepted version is that it happened in that same Cafe de Paris. Marthe was just entering, and, as usual, paused and posed a moment that everyone might take full note of her gown, gems and beauty. The effect was spoiled by a woman who arose from a table and shrieked at her.

Some say the shrieker was a Polish woman, others that she was an Italian. At any rate she spoke in broken French so that it was hard to understand all she said. The woman blamed Marthe for the deaths of quite a string of men, including Gobron and Nyegaard, and prophesied that it was Marthe's fate forever to bring death to everyone who loved her, a most unpleasant legend to connect with a cocotte.

The embarrassed man who was with the curser managed to get her out and Marthe made a brave effort to laugh the incident off, but she soon left the place and after that disclaimed all interest in aviators and flying.

For the duration of the war Marthe became less conspicuous. Many of her friends left her arms to die at the front, but the same could be said of thousands of other French girls. If Marthe's proportion of casualties was a little higher than the average, it was just coincidence. Yet people were very superstitious in the war, believing that hoodoos and charms guided the course of German shells.

After the war she blossomed out in a handsome villa in Hennequeville, a fashionable hamlet close to Deauville, where a group of wealthy Parisians have built Summer homes. The place has the dual advantage of being quietly aristocratic and yet within a short distance of the gayest ocean resort and its gambling casino.

Here Marthe Dalbane assumed a new pose. She was no longer the aviation girl, and it was not good manners to mention the subject, nor were aviators welcome, though she admitted one airplane manufacturer. The "Death Flower" now dabbled in painting, sculpture, but especially in music.

She soon gathered around her a group of the artistically inclined. Art and poverty often go together, but not in Hennequeville, and above all not in Marthe's villa. Of all the esthetes who made her home a rendezvous, each had an annual income of more than a million francs, except one, and he would have done better to have stayed away.

The "Death Flower's" soirees became rather famous. Paul Poiret, the stout overlord of Paris dressmakers, sang in his not very robust but pleasant baritone. Robert Morane, the airplane builder, who was careful never to talk shop, performed on the flute, while lovely Suzanne Vygnes accompanied them on the piano, and there was Theodore Tereschenko, known as the Russian beet-sugar king, who was a true artist with the violin.

Tereschenko was the man who did not belong, because he was a dethroned sugar king. He had come to France a multi-millionaire and his great fortune had attracted the eye of one of the reigning beauties of Paris, Suzanne Vygnes. She married him, played accompaniment to his violin and was a reasonably satisfactory wife while the money lasted. Then the Bolsheviks took charge of Russia and ruined Tereschenko.

His lovely wife pointed out that a poor man could no more keep her than he could a great steam yacht, and with sighs but no protests he yielded up the expensive luxury through the divorce court. Cruelty is a common charge against drug addicts, and has been made against the "Death Flower." One of the main counts in the indictment is her reputed treatment of Tereschenke.

Marthe Dalbane could not be ignorant of what everyone knew—that Tereschenko was eating his heart out with undiminished passion for his ex-wife.

moment. She wanted him to agree with his eyes wide open, realizing to the full what kind of a woman was this one who would never be his.

"There's no bait," she said quietly, "no trap."

Feverill laughed a little harshly. "I believe that—for the first time in my life. Are you in earnest?"

"Yes."

"Then my train leaves Victoria at three on Wednesday."

"You agree?" she asked in a small shaky voice.

He filled a wine glass for her. She raised it automatically. The blue-gray eyes met hers across its amber edge, mocking, provocative and reckless all in turn. Then they seemed to reflect a sort of inward derision of life and whatever pertained to it, like those of a gambler who risks all because he has so little to lose.

"Might I ask your full name, Miss Craig?"

She told him, chokingly.

He smiled—such a smile as she had never seen on the face of any man.

"To our next meeting, Vere!"

CHAPTER IV.

SHE held her courage during the next four days. Married! She was going to be married! A mere form. She kept repeating that to herself, with hardly a thought of the man. The fact was enough. Feverill sent her a brief note—he had made no suggestion of seeing her—saying that the license was issued, and would she meet him at the Registrar's office at two o'clock sharp. He signed himself "yours sincerely."

The note threw her into a sort of panic, and she saved herself by thinking about Lois, who, during this period, watched her with curious eyes. She attempted, once, to bring up the matter of the seventy-five hundred, but Vere would have none of it, and said she was doing everything she could to find the money, but would not know for a few days. Lois marvelled, and said nothing more. Supposing Vere failed, her father would be told. Then what? It would break his heart, he would sell his annuity, and they would give up the house. And Lois swore it would never come to that.

Vere was very quiet. Strange to be married, and make no preparations. Not one new thing to wear. No one to talk to, and she felt horribly lonely. She did not consider that she was doing anything brave, this being the only way to carry out what she took to be her duty. It would be like being married to someone by proxy. She wondered what real brides felt like.

On the fourth day Lois went off to Ascot, rather apologetic and explaining that the frock she wore was three months old. To her surprise Vere kissed her, and hoped she'd enjoy herself. When she took a bus from the house Vere knew that this was to avoid Donnell's coming for her. And, as usual, the Colonel lunched at his club.

At half past one Vere took another bus. She could not define any of her thoughts at this point—they were too chaotic—but she had been absurdly dubious as to what one ought to wear at a civil wedding. She decided that it didn't matter.

A hundred yards from the office, she saw Feverill waiting. He was in a dark-blue travelling suit that made the breadth of his shoulders very apparent. His skin, against a soft white collar, looked like bronze. He lifted his hat, his expression perfectly calm—almost uninterested.

"Before we go in," he said quietly, "here's a letter addressed to my solicitors. Please give it to them when you wish this arrangement to be ended. It will be quite sufficient for your purposes. I have asked them to defray any expense you are put to in the matter. Now—if you are ready."

He gave her no time to think or speak. She followed dumbly, and shortly found herself standing with him at a table, a dry-as-dust man reading from a book on the other side. He had a dry, clipped voice, indicative of thousands of ceremonies performed in exactly the same manner. When it came to the ring, Feverill had forgotten it.

Vere was aghast and frightened. It seemed that this was a signal from powers unseen—powers that protested, and she was violating, outraging something that would pursue them both and ultimately punish. That angle of it had not occurred to her before, and she was on the edge of breaking out and terminating this unknown farce, when Feverill's voice came in with a tone that was almost casual.

"Crossbow! Crossbow!" Lois Chanted Hysterically. "Crossbow at 33 to 1, and I've Had Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars on to Win for the Last Month."

"Never thought of that," he interjected.

The Registrar smiled. "It often happens in the excitement of the day, so I keep one here."

Then a curious thing happened. Feverill shook his head, hesitated a moment, sent Vere an extraordinary look, and jerked out his watch chain. On the free end was a small signet ring set with a flat emerald.

"Will this do?"

"Certainly," said the Registrar, "and it's a much nicer one than mine."

Vere felt it slip on her finger, and the dry voice proceeded. At the end of it, the official looked up expectantly. This was when the bride should be kissed. Vere understood, and flushed scarlet, but Feverill's expression was unchanged. Then signatures and a certificate that was handed to Vere with a murmur of congratulation. She took it dizzily, slipped it into her bag and stood waiting.

"That's all, I think," said Feverill.

They went out. She dared not look at him, and tried to formulate something that would thank him, but it was impossible to thank a man for marrying one. She made an odd little sound, sending him a sidelong glance.

"I don't—I can't say what—"

He smiled, and his strong and rather ugly face seemed to lose all its sternness.

"I wouldn't say anything; its quite all right, really. If you have nothing to do, we might walk a bit toward Victoria. We won't meet anyone you know if we go by the Strand and Whitehall. Besides, everyone's at Ascot.

She nodded, and they began their wedding trip—a walk up the Strand. The street was alive with newsboys selling racing editions of evening papers. Men clustered at corners reading racing tips. Buses thundered at arm's length, crawling taxis, loaded vans. It was a mechanical maelstrom, a strange part of London to her, and never so strange as today.

"Do not allow yourself to be disturbed by this affair," he said thoughtfully. "Best put it out of your mind—as I will. I'm glad to be of use, and hope it will bring about what you want. It doesn't mean anything to me, and its not likely we'll ever meet again."

The chilliness of it pulled her together, and she began to reassure herself. It was only a civil contract after all, entered into for the purpose of saving her sister from a dangerous situation and an intolerable debt. Nothing sacred about it whatever. Also it saved herself from marrying another man—any other man. She took another oblique look at Feverill. Her husband! There was only one ground she could meet him on—his own.

"I won't say anything if you don't want me to. You didn't think your visit to England would end like this, did you?"

"No, I'll admit that. Glad you're taking it this way. You were forced into it. I know. Now you think you'll pull off what you want to?"

"I know I will. And—oh!" she became suddenly conscious of the thing on her finger. "Your ring, please take it."

She had it half off when he stopped her. "Do you mind keeping it?"

She flushed deeply. "But I can't."

"There's no reason against it, and I'd much rather you would. That ring has a history, and I'm superstitious. If you gave it back I'd have to throw it away. And the emerald is talismanic."

"How?"

"It is believed to ward off evil, and evil spirits. Perhaps, from what you tell me, it is serving you already. And, again, there are no obligations. You needn't wear it, naturally, but please keep it."

He seemed curiously insistent, and, twisting the ring, she hesitated. A ring with no obligations, given her by a man who would never see her again. Then it struck her that it might be he wanted her to remember him for having done the decent thing, asking no questions. Perhaps some men were like that, unemotional, yet, at heart, sensitive as to what other people thought of them.

"Evil spirits?" she said musingly.

"Yes—or men. Practically the same thing."

She stared at him. Had he guessed?

"Whichever it is, I wish you good luck," he added laconically.

She saw that he did not want to talk about himself, and they filled in time with everything except each other. At the entrance to Victoria he halted, put out his hand, gripped hers so that the ring bit into her flesh, and vanished.

Home—and the wedding trip over! The whole thing had been a mirage. She took out the certificate. Michael Feverill-Vere Craig. Mrs. Michael Feverill! Well, it would last a month or so till he got deep into the wilderness—then end. She slipped off the ring, saw that it was engraved with an emblem like a rising sun, and wondered what its history was. And Lockerby—she would see him tomorrow.

The hours dragged. Then, a little after seven, the front door banged violently, and Lois rushed into the house.

"Vere! Vere! Are you here?"

"Yes, in my room."

Lois dashed upstairs, and burst in, her eyes shining, her face radiant, wild with excitement. She flung herself at Vere, kissed her many times, then danced madly round the room.

"Crossbow! Crossbow!" Lois chanted hysterically. "Crossbow at 33 to 1, and I've had two hundred and fifty dollars on to win for the last month. Vere—Vere—Vere, its all paid! Do you understand?"

CHAPTER V.

FEVERILL strode into Victoria Station, his face reflective. A woman had barged into his life—a woman unlike any he had seen before—done an amazing thing, and barged out again. Looking back at the last four days, his own part of it seemed quite clear. It was the kind of service which, if one could imagine it, he would have done for the right kind of a man.

It had never been Feverill's habit to waste time in trying to explain or excuse his own actions; and in this case the fact that a solicitor and no one else would know shed a certain light on the affair. It must be a matter of property in the hands of that solicitor, the possession of which turned on the girl's marriage.

And now that she had gone out of his life as suddenly as she entered, she began to take on a certain clearness of outline that had been in a way dimmed by her extraordinary attitude. From the first her beauty was incapable, but that had not moved him. What he responded to was another self that peeped out of her blue eyes and implored him not to misinterpret. He had not done so, and she, perceiving this, immediately admitted him to a sort of "entente" infinitely more intimate than she had ever extended to any living soul.

That he supposed was a compliment—but it went much further. It said to him—not in so many words, but in the entire freedom with which she spoke—that she had no interest in men—that she did not propose to surrender to any man—that she saw that he felt the same about women—and that since they shared what might be called a sex-indifference, and there would be no obligations on either side—would he marry her to help her out of a box.

But, after all, was it a compliment? At this he made a little grimace, shrugged his shoulders and waved a hand at Dartrey who was pacing up and down the Southampton platform.

"Hullo! I was held up for a few minutes—been here long?"

"No. I say, I want to talk to you."

"Right. Got that tracing?"

"Yes, but it isn't that. I suppose you know you're being a young fool?"

Feverill grinned at him. "Have been or about to be?"

"Both—and perhaps I was, too. I've been thinking over this affair, and it makes me uncomfortable. I shouldn't have said anything about it."

"Eh!"

"It's this—I'm—well—I'm not young any longer. Natural result is that I'm cooler. What I told you last week was merely a matter of record and interest—perhaps a bit unusual. I didn't expect you to jump at it in the way you did. Now I don't feel over comfortable. I'd drop it, if I were you."

Feverill shook his head. "Trouble with you is you're too sensitive. I told you the idea suited me exactly, and I'm going with my eyes wide open. Why I go is another matter. That's my affair."

"And I told you that you'd probably never come back. You're free—yes, and you can afford to live or die as you see fit, but, blame it, why don't you choose something else?"

Feverill put his big hand on the other man's shoulder.

"I'll tell you something. When you began to talk the other night, I knew you'd been sent to me with just what I wanted. No other word for it. I was going somewhere—anywhere—and a month in England was more than enough. I didn't know where I was going, but the further the better. I wasn't going to anything—that was the only hitch. Now that's all changed."

"You may be going to your death," said Dartrey in a low voice.

Feverill smiled quite happily. "We're all going there, old chap, some of us funking and others whistling. Thing is not to let the knowledge depress one. Remember those lines of Grenfell's?

> The fighting man shall from the sun
> Take warmth, and life from the glowing earth;
> Speed with the light-foot winds to run
> And with the trees to newer birth;
> And find, when fighting shall be done,
> Great rest, and fullness after dearth.

He repeated this in a quiet tone, heedless of the multitudes around him, his eyes quite contented, and in his face the smile of one who has known neither fear of men nor shame of self. And Dartrey, the man of science, who had delved into the story of dead cities and vanished peoples till the past was unrolled before him like a map, perceived that it was Feverill's very spirit with which he argued, and that arguments were vain. This thing was written.

"There's nothing you leave behind that you want to see again?" He put this in a last effort at self-assurance.

Feverill sent him an oddly wistful look. "Ah, that one cannot tell till afterward." Then, with a little lift in his voice: "Got that tracing?"

Dartrey nodded and took out a flat leather case six inches long. From this he produced a tracing, sectionalized, and pasted on strong cotton so as not to break when folded.

"All the geographical data is there. For the rest of it, I find that the story is mentioned in Breitmann's 'African Mysteries,' published in Munich thirty years ago. It was also hinted at long before that by Hakluyt. When the French occupied Kairwan in 1870 there was released among other prisoners, a Portuguese who was a servant in the house of the local Kaid. This man died soon afterward, but before his death he had a long talk with a French officer, a Sub-Lieutenant Duprez. He told Duprez that once he had got as far south as Largah, where he lived for a month with an old Arab who had come across from the foothills of the Jebel Ban.

"This Arab maintained that not far from Largah—you'll see it on the tracing—was a ravine where were many skulls, all beaten in; and, inside a cave, the skeletons of men with tools still in their hands."

Feverill's eyes brightened considerably. "That's promising. Carry on."

"Apart from that, there is every evidence that caravans used to go north into the Jebel Ban from Timbuktu, crossing the deserts of El Juf and Igidi, and come back with treasure. This afterwards went out by way of the Niger."

"Nothing more?"

Dartrey looked grave. "Ballon's expedition—the one that never came back. That was fifteen years ago. They were traced as far as Taurit, a Berber village—I've marked it—then vanished completely. Look out—your train's moving!"

Feverill smiled, gripped his friend's hand, and swung himself up. One could not have discovered a more cheerful-looking man in London. He stood there, very big, very broad, very confident.

"Goodbye, old chap. You'll hear from me—or of me. Don't worry. Largah—I'll make for Largah first. And the next time you go to Constant's—where I made one, turn down an empty glass. That's Omar—great stuff. I've got him with me."

Three Days of Terror

By J. S. Fletcher

The Story of a World Menaced by a Strange Power

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

YOUNG HENRY GRAHAM recently elected to Parliament, is engaged to Evelyn Wynyard, ward of his uncle, Oliver Wynyard, Chancellor of the Exchequer. At the Chancellor's he meets Count de Reineville, a mysterious Frenchman of considerable reputation as an amateur scientist. Graham is struck by the unnatural appearance of the Count and notices an indefinable feeling of uneasiness while in his presence.

The same evening Mr. Wynyard receives a visit from Lord Grandminster, the Prime Minister, who tells the Chancellor of a series of threatening letters purporting to come from a secret society in possession of a newly discovered force capable of destroying the world. The society demands a ransom of £100,000,000 from the Government. If it is not paid they threaten to destroy London. Wynyard and the Prime Minister consider the letter a hoax, but decide to take Henry Graham into their confidence and send him to confer with the society's representative. Graham meets the man on Westminster Bridge at one hour after midnight. He tells Graham that unless the terms of the Ultimatum are met by noon the Dictators will commence operations.

At three minutes past twelve the following day a veil of sudden gloom obscures the sun, waves of cold air roll over London, and several blocks around Charing Cross Station are blown up by an explosive that makes no sound. The ruins rapidly disintegrate into gray ashes, as though consumed by some fiercely-biting acid.

The Prime Minister enlists the services of Stephen Gotto, international authority on Anarchist outrages. He is unable to remember where he has met de Reineville before. The Dictators issue a public Ultimatum demanding that the ransom be paid within twenty-four hours or they will blow up London. A panic sets in forthwith.

But Graham, Watching the Man Covertly, Made a Startling Discovery—the Valet Was Deaf and Dumb.

Evelyn smiled, but Graham, watching her anxiously, saw that she was considerably distressed, and that she scarcely seemed to undertand the situation. He and Cynthia left the house together, and as soon as the door had closed upon them she turned to him with a meaning look.

"Walk a little way with me," Cynthia begged nervously, "there's something I must ask you. Look h re—what does all this mean? I don't like it—I don't half like it."

"Nor do I," answered Graham, shaking his head. "But what can we do? Mr. Wynyard has set his mind on accepting de Reineville's offer—after all, they are old friends—you heard what de Reineville said."

"I didn't attach at atom of importance to that," she replied. "I do not like that man, Mr. Graham, and I never shall like him. I believe that he has some influence over Mr. Wynyard—some evil influence. I am only going on this mad expedition because I love Evelyn and I mustn't desert her. You and I are to act as policemen, remember—"

"Great Heavens!" exclaimed Graham. "You—you don't think that any harm is intended to Evelyn in all this? If I thought so I would not consent to our leaving London, whatever m, uncle might say or do."

"No," answered Cynthia, after a moment's reflection. "I cannot say that I think that. It is quite possible that I am wrong in having any suspicions. Oliver Wynyard is an extraordinarily clever man, a man of great wisdom, and he loves Evelyn more than his own life. I cannot reasonably think that he would place her, or us, in any position of peril. But I do not, I do not like that man! I am uncomfortable about anything that relates to him. I do not like or understand his evident influence over Mr. Wynyard. And what I mean is that I want to help you, if need should arise, to safeguard Evelyn."

"You are a good woman, Cynthia," said Graham, who was moved by this genuine outburst of feeling from Miss Beachcroft's usually cynical lips. "I pray God there may be no ground for our fears. We are perhaps overwrought and anxious—I can scarcely believe that it is little more than twenty-four hours since I came back to town!"

Then they parted with a pressure of hands, and while Cynthia hurried to her rooms, Graham sped away to the Mews where Wyn-

"MY DEAR," said Wynyard, hurriedly addressing Evelyn, "M. de Reineville is most thoughtful and generous. He has come to offer us a shelter until this terrible affair is over. It is absolutely useless to deny, Evelyn, that we are running great risk every moment we spend in London, and only a lesser risk in remaining in England. M. de Reineville has kindly offered me the use of his chateau in Normandy, and I am so assured of the absolute necessity of your leaving here that I wish you to go there at once."

"I?" exclaimed Evelyn, with evident astonishment. "I, alone?"

"No, no!" said Wynyard. "No, of course. Cynthia, you will go with her? I want to see you in safety also. You will go? M. de Reineville will be most happy."

"I shall be most honored," said de Reineville, in a very sincere manner.

"I am much obliged to M. de Reineville," said Cynthia. "But—is it really necessary, Mr. Wynyard, that Evelyn should be sent out of the country? What of your own place in Yorkshire? Would that not prove a suitable refuge?"

Wynyard made an impatient movement.

"You forget," he said, "that as a minister of the Crown my various domiciles will be well known to these people. No—I want Evelyn to be placed in perfect safety. Let me tell you briefly exactly what is to be done. Harry," —he turned to Graham and spoke in sharp, business-like tones—"I wish you to take Evelyn and Miss Beacheroft over to the Chateau de Reineville, and remain there as their guardian until all this is over. That is M. de Reineville's own thoughtful proposition. You must all leave at once—and now as to your manner of leaving. It is hopeless to expect to get down to the Coast by train—the stations are doubtless besieged already. M. de Reineville's yacht is lying at Gravesend, and he has added to his other kindness by sending down instructions that she is to have steam up and to be ready to take you on board for Havre, as soon as you reach her. You must start at once—that is, as quickly as possible."

"But, what of yourself?" said Evelyn. "I cannot leave you here. You"—she crossed the room and laid her hand on his arm—"you are coming with us?" Wynyard stooped and kissed her forehead.

"I cannot, my dear," he said decisively. "My place is here in London. I will be all right—I shall go into the barracks at the treasury until the war is over. There, do not say any more, Evie—you will be safe and happy in the retreat M. de Reineville is offering us, and you will have Cynthia and Harry with you."

"I beg that each of you—Miss Wynyard—Miss Beachcroft—Mr. Graham," said de Reineville, "will honor me by looking upon my house as your own. I owe much to Mr. Wynyard—he was my great friend—my benefactor—in other days, and it will be a source of delight to me to know that I can offer his ward and her friends a refuge. I have sent my servants the fullest commands. I beg that you will honor me by your acceptance of all I can offer."

"It is most good of you, M. de Reineville," said Evelyn, with real gratitude in her voice. "But you yourself—are you not crossing over?"

The Frenchman shook his head.

"I have worked here," he said, with a significant emphasis. "It is my regret that I cannot do my duty as host. I beg Mr. Graham to discharge that duty for me. Permit me to make my adieux."

Before Graham had recovered from his astonishment at these remarkable proceedings, de Reineville had shaken hands with the ladies and himself, and was being escorted into the hall by Wynyard. In another moment the cab had driven away, and Wynyard came hurrying back.

"There is no time to be lost," he said. "Evelyn—Cynthia—you must make your preparations at once. Harry, come with me—there are things yet to arrange."

Graham followed his kinsman into the library, and closed the door upon them.

"I do not like this, sir," he said, before Wynyard could speak. "I do not like it at all, and I must tell you so."

Wynyard, who was bending over his desk, raised his head and stared at his nephew. It seemed to Graham that a new expression had come into his face.

"You do not like it?" he said. "Do not like—what?"

"I do not like this arrangement. Is it really necessary that Evelyn should be sent to M. de Reineville's house—to the house of a stranger?"

"Stranger? I have known him—ah! thirty years."

"I did not know that, sir. I beg your pardon. But—could I not have taken her and Miss Beacheroft to Paris?"

Wynyard stamped the floor in his impatience.

"Where the Dictators may begin operations at any moment!" he cried.

"Then to some obscure village in the South of France, or in Spain. I know several where we could be lost to the world," said Graham. "Why this particular house?"

"This is foolish," said Wynyard. "Do you not see that as things are, the very spot on which we are standing might for all practical purposes be the mouth of a volcano? I want Evelyn placed in safety—de Reineville offers me speedy means of escape from England for her, a comfortable home for her, and absolute security there—should I not be a fool to refuse his kindness? And yet you, who should have her safety most deeply at heart, would throw that kindness back at him!"

Graham started as though some hand had smitten him in the face. He could scarcely believe his ears—he had never heard Wynyard adopt that tone since his first remembrance of him. His immediate impulse was to utter an indignant denial, but he suddenly remembered that Wynyard was weighted down with burdens and responsibilities, and that the events of the day had been enough to shock the strongest nerves, and he spoke gently.

"Very well, sir," he answered. "I will do all that you wish. I will take Evelyn and Miss Beachcroft over to this gentleman's house, and remain there with them until you desire our return."

"That's a good boy!" said Wynyard, with a return to something like his old manner. "Now listen, Harry. It may be"—he placed his hand with an affectionate gesture on Graham's shoulder—"it may be that in the events of the next few days my life will go with the rest. That's on the cards, and one must take the chances. If it is so, all my private affairs are in Crawford's hands—he can tell you everything. When this—this awful business is over, if I should not be here, you will come back with Evelyn, and attend to everything. I——"

"I don't like all this, sir," said Graham once more. "I wish you would not send us away. At any rate, let me return to you when I have seen the others in safety."

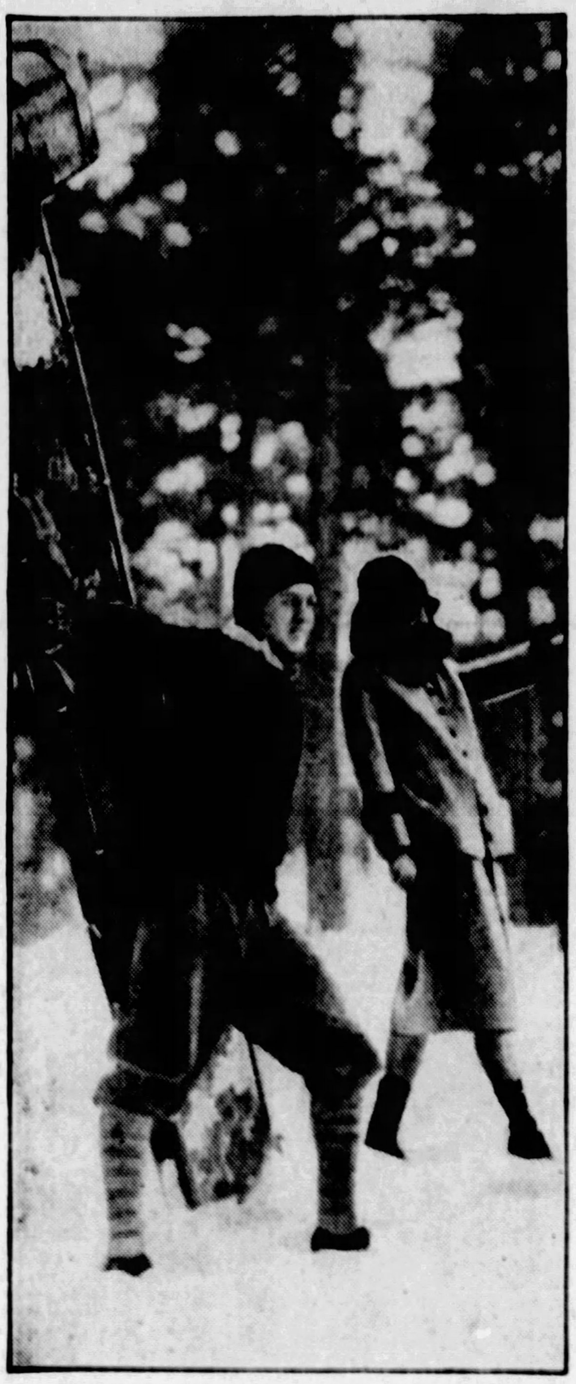
"No, my boy," replied Wynyard. "Your first duty is to Evelyn, and you must do it. Well—all there is to do now is to arrange for your departure. The railway's no good—you mustn't trust your lives to such scenes as will go on for the next few hours at all the stations. You'll have to drive, Harry. Get what you want for yourself from your own rooms, and be ready to start from here in an hour."

Recognizing that there was nothing left but to follow out his kinsman's behest, Graham left the room, and after a word or two with Phillips as to provisioning, set about his business. As he passed the door of the morning-room, Cynthia Beachcroft came out.

"How soon do we start, Mr. Graham?" she inquired.

"Within an hour—I am attending to everything now," answered Graham.

"And I am going around to Bruton Street in the hope of finding my rooms still unsacked, and of bringing away at least a traveling cloak," she said. "Evelyn, if Julie has disappeared with my effects I shall fall back on you."



Locomotion in Minnesota!... Mr. A. C. Kyhn and Miss Gladys Kyhn out for a frosty ride

"Now so well I can eat anything!"

"FOOD did not appeal to me in any form. In fact, my stomach was in such shape that anything I ate disagreed with me.

"And I had lost all my old vitality.

"Three cakes a day of Fleischmann's Yeast and today I am again eating my meals with real enjoyment and relish. My wife and three children have also become ardent users of Fleischmann's Yeast and are enjoying the same beneficial results that I am."

Arthur C. Kyhn

EVERY bit as fresh as any garden vegetable, Fleischmann's Yeast is not a medicine, but a pure corrective food.

Fleischmann's Yeast restores your health and energy by keeping your intestinal tract clean, by strengthening the sluggish, weak intestinal muscles.

Gradually these muscles begin to do their work again. Elimination becomes more regular, more complete. Food wastes, now promptly thrown off, no longer poison your system. Your digestion improves. Your skin clears and freshens. Once again you feel your old vigorous, happy self!

All grocers have Fleischmann's Yeast. Buy two or three days' supply at a time and keep in any cool, dry place. Best results are obtained when you eat Fleischmann's Yeast regularly, three times every day.

And write today for a free copy of the latest booklet on Yeast in the diet. Address Health Research Dept. S-48, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington St., New York City.

"IT WAS about a year ago that I first complained to my husband of feeling ill. My appetite had vanished. My sleep no longer rested me. I felt sluggish, tired—only half alive. And I was troubled with constipation. My housework grew irksome and even my social activities turned from a pleasure to a grievous burden . . . I was doubtful when my husband suggested Fleischmann's Yeast. After eating it for a time, however, I became aware of feeling better than I had in many months. Well! I continued to improve right along. My constipation left me, the color returned to my cheeks. I began to feel active and strong—and able to do my work without any special effort on my part. Of course Fleischmann's Yeast plays a prominent part in our family's diet now."

Mrs. F. A. Lindenmeyer

East Milton, Mass.

"I AM keenly interested in sports, and wanted to take part in all the athletic and social events of my school—but for a time I was so embarrassed by eruptions on my face that I hated to go out at all. It so happened that my mother had derived splendid results from eating Fleischmann's Yeast. I began eating it myself—two cakes a day dissolved in milk. My face cleared up entirely and my pleasure in school activities revived. I ate Yeast for a year—in fact, I still eat it off and on, just to keep in condition."

Charles T. Park

Health for you—this new easy way

Eat three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly every day, one cake before each meal or between meals. Eat it plain, or dissolved in water (hot or cold) or any other way you like. For stubborn constipation physicians say to drink one cake in a glass of hot water—not scalding—before meals and before going to bed. Train yourself to form a regular daily habit. Dangerous cathartics will gradually become unnecessary.

Three Days of Terror

yard's stables were situated. But the stables were well-nigh empty. The harness-room was unoccupied; not a man was visible in the yard; the various carriages were all in their places, but two or three horses had disappeared from their stalls.

The garages were empty.

Graham stood peering about him in blank astonishment. What was to be done? It was impossible for him, unaided, to put horses to a heavy carriage, and then drive them down to Gravesend through all the growing confusion of London streets. He cursed the faint-heartedness, the base ingratitude, of the men who, having fattened on his generosity for years, had fled from their master's service at the first signs of danger.

A low hissing sound roused Graham from his disagreeable reverie. It seemed to come from a door opening out of the stable in which he was then standing, and he walked across and pushed it open. There, busily employed in rubbing down a horse, was a stable-lad, who, as he worked, made the peculiar sibilant noise common to hostlers. The click of the opening door made him pause in his labor; he straightened himself and turned round, revealing to Graham a shrewd, young-old face, from the mouth of which protruded a half-chewed straw, and a lean, lanky body poising itself on two ridiculously thin legs. As the stable-boy caught sight of Graham, he touched his cap and grinned widely.

"Hullo!" said Graham, smiling in spite of himself. "Are you the only person left here? Where are all the rest of the men?"

"I'm afeerd they're all run away, sir," said the other. "They said as how all London were goin' to be blowed up, and off they went."

"Why didn't you go, too?" asked Graham.

The stable-lad scratched his head; his grin spread from ear to ear.

"Why," he said, hesitatingly, "I hadn't finished this here mare, and besides, if I'd gone who'd ha' looked after all t' hosses? And I'm none so sure about t' blowin' up."

"You're a Yorkshireman?" said Graham.

"Walk a Little Way With Me," Cynthia Begged Nervously. "There's Something I Must Ask You."

"Yes, sir. I come thro' Somerlease,"—naming Wynyard's seat in the broad-acred county.

Graham thought matters over thoroughly. There was nothing left but to make the best of what materials remained. He sat down on a corn-bin and talked the matter over fairly and squarely with the stable-lad, whose name was Robert Gibson, and the end of their conversation was that within half an hour, Robert—having assumed a new suit of whipcord in which he seemed to take particular pride—and himself had made all preparations and were taking the carriage round to Wynyard's house. At the door they encountered Cynthia, staggering under a bundle of garments. She smiled grimly.

"Just as I expected!" she said. "The demure and virtuous Julie has helped herself freely and decamped. This is indeed a wonderful day, but I'm not sure that it mayn't do good in the end. It's telling us at any rate who our friends are, and teaching us to act for ourselves. I never carried such a weight in my life before—nor cared so little for appearances!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Yacht "L'Hirondelle."

HAVING thrown her various impedimenta into the carriage, Cynthia favored the entire turnout with a long and critical stare, and then inquired where the servants were who were to take it in charge. Graham explained the situation, adding that he believed that Robert Gibson and himself might be trusted to get through to Gravesend. Cynthia's expression of countenance on hearing this news seemed to imply her doubt on the point, but she offered no remark and disappeared into the house to assist Evelyn in making her final preparations. As she entered the hall Wynyard came out, and seeing his carriage at the door went down the steps in order to inspect the arrangements which Graham had made. He evinced no surprise on hearing that his stable staff had departed, but he seemed doubtful whether Graham and the boy would succeed in piloting their charge through the crowded streets.

"There is nothing else for it," said Graham, who by this time was in a state of angry despair which had developed the worst sort of apathy. "We must do our best."

As good fortune would have it there came up at this moment the hansom cab in which de Reineville had driven away three-quarters of an hour before and the driver, noticing the arrangements that were being made, drew up and showed considerable interest in them. He contrived to catch Graham's eye, and touched his cap.

"Beggin' your pardon, sir," he said, leaning from his perch, "was you a thinkin' o' drivin' that there turn-aht through the streets anywheres? I see you ain't no coachman, nor nothink. Nah, them streets"—he jerked his thumb over his shoulder—"them streets is getting a fair treat—I tells yer strite! 'Ow fur might yer be thinkin' o' goin' guv'nor?"

"Oh!" said Graham impatiently, "to Gravesend."

"To Grivesend! Well, s'elp me! Guvnor, yer'll never do it! They sye as o'we its 'ell itself all dahn the East End wye—yer'll 'ave the bloomin' carriage wrecked afore yer gits ter San Paul's! Look 'ere, guv'nor, I mikes yer a fair offer—there's precious few drives in London as knows there wye abaht as I do—I'll drive yer dahn there meself. I can 'andle a pair as well as I can 'andle this 'ere old hoss, guv'nor. 'Ere. I'll do the strite thing by yer—if I tikes yer dahn there all right yer gives me a couple o' fivers—see? If I don't w'y, yer gives me somethink for me trouble, eh? What d'yer sye, guv'nor?"

Graham would have sent this person about his business, but Wynyard, who had followed the man attentively, laid his hand on his nephew's arm.

"That's the very thing, Harry," he said. "My man—I'll close with your offer. But what will you do with your own horse and cab?"

"All right, sir," answered the man with alacrity. "They ain't mine—I 'ires 'em from a proprietor just at the back 'ere, and I was a-goin' 'ome with 'em, when I come acrost this little lot o' yours. I'll deliver 'em up safe afore this 'ere blowin' up begins, and be back wiv yer in no time."

Whipping up his horse the loquacious cabman drove off, and Wynyard and Graham went back into the house. For the next ten minutes all was hurry and confusion. The old butler and the stable boy carried out a case of provisions and stowed it away in the carriage; the things which Evelyn had put together were packed away beneath one seat, and those of Miss Beachcroft's bringing reduced to order on the other, while Graham, who always kept a change of clothes and linen at his uncle's house, ran upstairs and packed a portmanteau with absolute necessities. When he came down again the cabman had returned, and was looking the horses and the harness over in a very knowing and businesslike way. There was now nothing to do but depart, and after a tearful parting between Evelyn and her guardian, the three voyagers entered the carriage, the volunteer coachman and the stable-lad climbed up to their places, and the signal was given to start off. Wynyard was standing at the open door waving his hand, and by his side lingered the old butler, wiping his eyes with a napkin, which he had inadvertently caught up in passing through the dining room and had carried about with him for quite half an hour.

It was seven o'clock in the evening; the news of the Ultimatum had spread everywhere; rumors of the helplessness of the Cabinet had permeated clubs, hotels restaurants, private houses; a general feeling of coming disaster had extended to the suburbs. All London was rising—London usually so bright and joyous at that hour of a June evening, when the toil of the day was over for the workers, and the pleasures of the night were beginning for the butterflies. Overhead the sky was blue and cloudless; the scent of flowers was everywhere; the promise of a perfect June night lay dreaming in the twilight that was yet to be born. Of all these things London thought nothing. From north to south, from east to west, the fear of Death ran throbbing through her arteries, nerves, sinews, and the magnificence of her scornful contempt for aught but her own might was suddenly destroyed. She shivered like a mighty beast into whose heart the hunter's bullet has sped with swift and silent wings, and the shivering left her cold and sick and sore afraid.

In the golden-tinted eventide, she began to weep and tremble as the man weeps and trembles who is afraid of the thing he cannot see. Had it but been some blessed, healthy foe, some enemy that she could have clasped hands with and kissed, the bloody fight once over, and the enmity wiped out in honest fashion by the shedding of clean-spilt blood, how had she rejoiced! Instead of whimpering like a child in the palpitating darkness of an unlit room, she would have risen, great, grim, glorious, laughing at the smell of the blood that she and the hosts arrayed against her must spill like water, confident in her strength and beautifully insolent because of it. Had the armies of Europe suddenly shown themselves massed along the low hills about her, her careless laughter would have rung out clear against them, and behind the laughter would have come the cheering of her sons and the rattle of the steel with which they would have gone out to resist, and die, and conquer. Let any of the old, honorable, beautiful foes come!—one by one, one down, the other come on—let them come all together, seeking to pay off once for all, the ancient, clean-thoughted grudge—and she was ready, and willing, and stern-eyed.

But against this—this awful unseen terror that sat in her midst, intangible, mysterious, like a thing wrapped about with all the loathsome cerements of the final blackness—how could she fight? Put the bravest man who ever drew breath into a room in which he must stand in darkness; let him know that out of that darkness there may at any moment glide, flash, or creep to his heart a touch that will mean death—death against which he cannot shield himself in any way, and a tremor will run from the top of his head to the end of his great toe or his little one, whichever you like. He may—doubtless will—stand up bravely and wait, wait, wait, until the thing is on him, but despite his bravery he will age in those moments of waiting, and if he should come out alive, his face will not be pretty to look at. Put a weak man into such a position; he will weep and slobber and grovel, and run from one corner of the room to another crying in such a fashion that if you heard the voice of it—the poor, wee, thin noise only heard under such circumstances—you would wake up every night for a year, sweating and praying God to banish the thing out of your memory forever. And most men are weak, weak and very much afraid of anything that they cannot see, and if you cannot explain a thing to them in terms which their limited intelligence permits them to understand, they begin to run, and the further they run the more they fear, and their last state is worse than their first.

London was afraid, London was beginning to run. Seven millions of people seized with panic. They began to move slowly at first, and some, after setting out, went back, and then set out again, and maybe went back a second time, but kept on moving. They came out of the fashionable quarters and the fever-stricken slums, and naturally every one fought for himself. Few had any very clear notion as to a port of salvation. If you stand beneath a mighty weight, knowing that in one second more it will fall and make a nasty mess of you on the flags or the carpet, you don't consider which way you will run—you jump, quick. These people's first instinct, then, hearing of the Ultimatum of the Dictators, was to jump as quickly and as far as possible—in any direction. And so the streets and thoroughfares into which our fugitives, piloted by the heaven-sent jehu who swore and cursed and made beautiful unconscious repartees from the box on which, under less heroic circumstances, a well-fed coachman had majestied, were crowded with men and women, into whose souls such a fear had entered as the world had not known since the Lord drove their forefathers out of Sodom and Gomorrah.

How the man got them out of London Graham will never know to the day of his death. But get them out he did, saving his horseflesh in a wonderful fashion, and displaying a knowledge of local geography which was marvelous. Moreover, once clear of the Metropolis itself, he betrayed a distinct genius in avoiding highroads, and an acquaintance with the by-lanes of Kent, which suggested a notion that he must at one time have gone a-hopping. It was in one of these by-lanes, at one o'clock in the morning, with a silver moonlight flooding all the land, and the lights of London lying far behind, that he pulled up his horses and turned to Graham.

"I sye, guv'nor," he said, "yer aren't so very pertikler abaht 'urryin' on to Grivesend nah that we've got aht o' the thick of it, awr yer? 'Cos yer see, me an' the boy 'ere's a bit on the empty side, like, and I hears the old bloke sye as 'ow 'e'd put plenty o' pervision in the kerridge. 'Ow would it do to 'ave a sort o' picnic, guv'nor, like they does on the Dahns, Derby Dye?"

"I beg your pardon," said Graham, humbly. "I had quite forgotten that you must be famished."

"And that we must, too," said Cynthia, unrolling herself from a mass of wraps. "I think that man's a perfect genius. Picnic! Of course; let's picnic in the moonlight. Aren't you awfully hungry, Evelyn? Remember, we had no dinner."

"What a forgetful brute I am," said Graham. "I have been thinking of far different things and I thought you were both asleep. Pull up, my man—we'll see what Phillips has put up for us."

In the moonlight they stayed their flight and ate and drank with some appetite, forgetting for the moment that panic-stricken London lay behind them, and that out of every exit men and women less favorably situated than themselves were trooping. "They was a very nice haffable lot, they was," said the heaven-sent cabman, when he reported his adventures to an appreciative audience later on. "Me an' the boy—which was Yorkshire, an' knew a thing or two abaht 'osses, and no bloomin' error—me an' the boy, I tells yer, we was all like one wiv 'em. 'Ed a tysty hidea o' doin' things, that there old flunky wot packed the wittals, you tike my tip. They give me a rare pliteful o' stuff—little sackvichers wot yer could shift at abaht a dozen at a time, and leg o' cold fahl and 'am—oh, they done me an' the boy a fair treat, and give us a big bottle o' fizz between us, and a drop o' somethin' short and tysty to keep the sparkle dahn. 'Have a cigar, my man,' says the young swell, w'en we'd made them wittals look silly, and gives me an' the boy a 'andful. Lor' lumme! I don't care if London's blowed up once a bloomin' fortnight ser long as I gits a job like that whenever the blowin' up stawts!"

At three o'clock in the morning, with the radiance of a June sunrise filling the Eastern sky, Graham and his charges arrived at Gravesend, and saw the yacht lying in mid-stream, with steam up. In answer to his signal a boat immediately put off from her, and Graham began to make his final preparations for leaving English soil. He paid the stipulated fee to the impromptu coachman, and gave him a handsome tip into the bargain, and dismissed him with a regret which was fully reciprocated. The stable-lad Gibson he decided to take with him as his personal attendant, and Gibson was nothing loth to go. And so, all things being in order, the four fugitives awaited the boat with calm acquiescence to their fate.

As the boat drew near to the landing-stage Graham noticed that the men who pulled it were of exceptionally fine physique and very smartly attired, and that the officer at the tiller wore a uniform corresponding in many respects to that of a lieutenant in the Royal Navy. This personage, on bringing the boat up to the steps, saluted Graham with great politeness of manner, and superintended the arrangements for taking the party off with many evidences of thoughtfulness for the comfort of the ladies. He addressed Graham in the French language, apologized for his ignorance of English, and added that the captain possessed a perfect knowledge of the latter tongue, and had, indeed, resided in England for many years.

Upon approaching the yacht Graham was much struck by her size, and by the beauty of her lines. She lay upon the water as a seabird sits it, rising and sinking as the waves ran past in a gentle swell. She was schooner-rigged, and her two tapering masts and buff-colored funnel rose skyward at exactly the same saucy rake, while her rail coming in a beautiful curve from her fine high bow, dipped gently amidships, and rose as gently towards her stern. Graham observed the bow particularly. It was beautifully overhanging and suggestive of clearing the waves without sending up a shower of spray all over the decks; the counter, equally fine, took away all appearance of weight. She was painted white, with a thin gold riband which showed to advantage the sweep of her side. A fine mahogany steam launch hung from the davits on the starboard quarter, forward of which was a pretty four-oared gig, while aft, on the port side, was a powerful sailing cutter. Her stanchions, binnacles, and brass work generally shone with great brilliancy in the first rays of the morning sun, and Graham, who had some experience of the sea and of ships, was bound to confess that he had never looked upon a smarter craft.

Had Graham and his companions been members of a reigning house they could not have met with a more impressive reception than that which awaited them on board M. de Reineville's beautiful vessel. The ship's company was drawn up to receive them and greeted their coming aboard with a general salute; the captain, meeting them at the head of the gangway, welcomed them in the name of the Count de Reineville with great cordiality and respect, and immediately conducted them to a magnificently appointed saloon where several domestics of both sexes

Have You Acid Scalp?

If your hair won't keep the simplest wave for several days, there is probably too much acidity. A condition that causes hair to be stubbornly straight and stringy, and to lack all lustre. Acid scalp.

From the hour you check this excessive acidity your hair will act and appear very different. It will arrange easily in any style that becomes, for it will have lovely softness, and all the sheen all healthy hair normally has. Danderine will neutralize the acid, and actually dissolve every particle of dandruff scale. Your hair won't need anything else to keep it fresh, wholesome, and free from the least objectionable taint that is too often noticed in otherwise fastidious women.

Danderine sells for only thirty-five cents at any drugstore, and as only a few drops on comb or towel will do the work, a bottle lasts for weeks!

The Unlit Lamp By Sinclair Murray

He went into his compartment, still smiling. Free, utterly free, and Africa before him. The clicking rail points set up a rhythmic monotone, lulling his brain till he saw opening before him a vast expanse of arid land, fringed by the serrated teeth of gaunt and distant hills. Somewhere far beyond that lay Largah, far in the heart of the Africa he had loved and explored for years past. Fortunate now, he reflected, that he could talk Arabic like a Mozabite.

Alone in the compartment, he spread the tracing on his knees, and began to study it intently. It had been made by a good draughtsman under Dartrey's supervision, and gave what information was available of a little-known corner of the earth. He saw that Largah was about 400 miles south of Taurit, where Ballou disappeared. A caravan route passed about 50 miles east of the former point.

Largah itself was indicated as being out in the true Sahara, a long way from the foothills of the Jebel Ilan and evidently an oasis village. All this country adjoined the southeast boundary of Morocco, a boundary that varied with the ideas of the individual map-maker, and was as unfixed as the windblown crests of the desert itself.

Dartrey had warned him against going in from the Atlantic coast by way of Mogador and the Atlas Range. This was the shortest approach, but far too uncertain. So he had decided to travel by Algiers and south to Laghouat, then strike southwest, and avoid the French military posts, the French authorities being suspicious of foreigners who penetrated too far into the country of the wild tribes that peopled their desert kingdom.

He had the tracing almost by heart, and was pushing it into the leather case, when a man entered his compartment, apologized and asked in excellent English if Monsieur would be so kind as to supply him with a match. Thus obliged, he lit a cigarette, made profuse thanks and lingered a moment.

"Monsieur goes, I see, to Algiers?"

Feverill nodded, not overpleased.

"The heat there at this time, it is terrible. But, perhaps, Monsieur knows that?"

"Yes—I know it—but I don't mind heat. I'll be there for a few days only, on business." He shot a glance at the man, noting that he looked like a Spaniard, had large ears and the left eyelid drooped a little.

"Monsieur is to be congratulated. Again my thanks."

He went out, and Feverill forgot about him till, observing his handbag, it appeared that in the circumstances it was not necessary to proclaim his name and destination. He jerked off the label, and threw it under the seat. That done, it occurred to him that, in case he lost the tracing, it would be wise to record his memorized notes; so he pulled out the free end of his watchchain. It carried a small gold pencil.

For years it had carried something else, and, pencil in hand, he pitched his mind back over the events of the past four days. There had been little time to think as yet, and now the affair of his marriage presented itself in a more serious light. Suppose that he never came back from this wild pilgrimage—and the girl said nothing to his solicitor?

He frowned, staring at the undulating fields of Hampshire. She would then, if she wished it, be his legal heir. This angle was quite new. She would, on the production of her marriage certificate, come into certain property in Dorset that yielded two thousand a year. He didn't mind that so much, having no dependants, but it struck him for the first time that a name was something. However, he had not done much for his. Then with a faint amusement he decided that, he himself being dead, his widow was not likely to remain long a widow, especially with ten thousand a year. In that case she would have no enduring need for his name.

He wondered, nevertheless, if it would not have been wiser to let Dartrey into the secret. Dartrey knew about the other woman who, four years ago, had changed the color of life for his friend and broken his faith in the thing called love. And Dartrey was cool-headed. But, having given a pledge of silence, he himself could say nothing to Dartrey. Then, beginning to see this mad affair in its true light, he perceived conditions in which it was only just that his wife, who was only a phantom wife, should know more about him than she did. So he scribbled a formal note to her, reflecting grimly that this was his first and last, giving Dartrey's name. And he left it to her to ask Dartrey what she pleased.

He got out at Southampton Pier, and, strolling toward the passport wicket, encountered the stranger who had asked for a light. This individual smiled, raised his hat, and glanced swiftly at Feverill's handbag. As soon as the young man had moved on he hastened back to the empty compartment, emerging shortly with a smile on his smooth face.

A few moments after there took place a conversation with an elderly man who stood near the gangway. Feverill was settling himself in a deck chair.

"That is our friend—the big one with the blue-gray eyes."

"You are sure?"

"Undoubtedly, and here is his name in his own writing. What next?"

The elderly man took a pinch of snuff. "Nothing at this end. Go back to London, and wait for orders. My duty lies between here and Algiers, and there the matter will be carried on by those who know the country and are younger than myself. You overheard nothing?"

"A little—but it was difficult. There was talk of Largah, but more than that I did not get. His friend Dartrey was not anxious that he should go, but our adventurer was amused. I think you will not have any difficulty."

The elderly man examined the torn label turning it over slowly between his long yellowish fingers. "Let us charitably hope that Mr. Michael Feverill has not signed his own death warrant. He is too young for that."

He chuckled to himself, felt for his snuffbox, and, involuntarily raising his head, saw Feverill leaning stiffly forward staring straight at him.

CHAPTER VI.

"VERE!" cried Lois ecstatically, "don't you understand? I'm free—free as air!"

Vere sat as though hypnotized. "Free!" she whispered.

Another tarantella round the room, and the girl subsided in a panting heap at her sister's knees.

"The most amazing thing has happened. Do you remember when I told you everything last week, I also told you that I had one bet on—just one?"

"Did you?" Vere's voice was faint, and she had turned rather white.

Lois was too excited to notice anything. "Yes—that was quite true, and the bet was on Crossbow for the Royal Hunt Cup. It was made in my mad extravagant days, the ones that are over. And today—" she went on in a tone that held a touch of awe, "Crossbow won by a head—think of that—by a head—a rank outsider. And I made $8,250. That was this afternoon at 3 o'clock. If I had known where you were, I'd have raced to you at once. What were you doing at three?"

"I went for a walk," said Vere shakily.

"Well, then I thought of wiring you or telephoning, but wanted to tell you myself, it being as much of a relief to you as it is to me." She broke off with a quick glance. "Vere, aren't you well?"

"I—I haven't been feeling up to much lately."

Lois overflowed with contrition. "I'm so sorry. I know perfectly well how you felt, and you never scolded me once after that night." She put her arms round her sister, holding her close. "You felt it more, in a way, than I did. I can see that now, but, Vere darling, it's all over now. I've been a selfish, thoughtless, extravagant little devil, but Jack will have his check the day after tomorrow, and he's promised to take it. So, dearest, do forgive me and cheer up. You've nothing to worry about now—really."

Vere sent her a strange smile. "And after this?"

"I've been scared stiff, and it's done me good. I'm not betting any more, not spending and not borrowing. In fact, I'm going to look for a job. My word of honor on that. I've told Jack, and he seems to feel that the whole thing's been his fault—which made me wonder what you said to him last week. What did you say, Vere?"

"Does that matter now?"

"Perhaps not; but he told me that, afterwards, he went home horribly limp. And ever since then you've been so queer and unhappy that I began to fear you'd marry someone just to get that money and save me. Perfectly crazy to imagine such a thing, I know, but—" she rippled into a laugh of sheer happiness, "Vere, what do you think I ought to do now? I want to be a bit more like you—more definite and well-balanced. Your judgment's so good that it saves you after-regrets. I can see now that because Jack was generous and easy going I used him for my own purposes. It was horrid, and you can't say anything about it harder than I would say myself. But—Heavens! I can't believe yet that it's all over and done with. Vere, you look dreadful! Shall I bring you something?"

"I—I think I'll lie down for a while," said Vere unsteadily.

Lois fussed over her, patting pillows in an excess of devotion.

"What were you doing all day? I saw the Pollitts, and they were awfully sorry you didn't come. The Enclosure looked a perfect dream. Mrs. Pollitt said you had a long talk at Constant's the other night with a man they knew. Some kind of an explorer, and a regular woman-hater."

"Yes," said Vere, pulling herself together, "a Mr. Feverill."

"Interesting?"

"Yes, quite."

"He ought to be because explorers don't marry—at least not the good ones," reflected Lois demurely. "Going to see him again?"

"No, he left England this week."

"If it were me, I'd have gone to see him off. Frightfully romantic, waving your——" she paused and experienced a sudden and very definite thrill. "Vere—it's awfully cheeky of me, but did he propose?"

Vere shut her eyes. "No, he wasn't that kind. I'll try and get to sleep now, and please don't send any dinner up. I rather thought you'd be out tonight."

"I was asked," said Lois virtuously, "but wanted to give you the news."

She pulled down the blinds, and went out on tiptoe, closing the door very quietly. Queer sort of girl, Vere. One would have thought she'd have been overjoyed, instead of which she was more sober than ever. Almost frightened, in a way, judging by her expression. And not one cheery word of congratulation. Could she think it was wrong to pay one's debts that way? And what in the world had she said to Jack Donnell to make him so queer? Anyway, Crossbow won by a head, and, compared to that other questions were of no moment. No question there.

In the dining room she found the Colonel distinctly fidgety.

"Five minutes late, Lois. Where's Vere?"

"She's got a bad headache, father. She's lying down."

"Umph! You'd better send her up something."

"I wouldn't now—perhaps later."

"Where have you been today—you look very festive." He screwed in his eyeglass, and regarded her critically. "Nice frock, too. That a new one?"

"I've been to Ascot, and it was heavenly. The Enclosure looked like a lovely human garden."

"I see that Crossbow won the Hunt Cup. You're not betting, I hope."

"No, father, I'm not betting." Lois' expression was nothing short of angelic.

"Glad to hear it, for that would be the beginning of the end. Hanged if I understand how you can afford Ascot anyway. Did you say that was a new frock?"

"Gracious, no! I've had it for months; and as for Ascot, the day didn't cost me a penny. People are awfully kind about invitations."

"Who asked you?" demanded the Colonel abruptly.

"Mr. Donnell—he took a party in a big car."

Her father reflected a moment. It was a week now since he had rather let himself go in that talk with Vere, and he hadn't got any-

Are We Becoming Immune to Disease?

THE hope that man may look forward to a time when he becomes so used to infectious diseases that they will disappear altogether, in view of the fact that most of the ills that affect us are becoming milder and less dangerous, is held out by Dr. I. Laumonier, writing in Le Petit Provencal (Marseilles, France).

"We always end up by dying, but everyone wishes to delay this event as long as possible," writes Dr. Laumonier. "In this regard the most recent statistics purvey a certain degree of comfort, since they show that the average length of human life is increasing about 12 months every 10 or 12 years. At this rate, in a few scores of centuries, our descendants will be living as long as the Biblical patriarchs.

"Perhaps we should derive additional consolation from the fact that we do not die of the same maladies as our ancestors. In fact, certain diseases have been disappearing, while new ones take their places—or, at any rate, seem to do so; for often what we are inclined to consider a new disease as only a very old one which has changed its character, either through the efforts of preventive hygiene and specific therapeutics, or under the influence of some spontaneous transformation whose causes escape us.

"Numerous cases illustrate this. Thus, acute articular rheumatism, though it sometimes occurs as an epidemic, has become rarer and does not attack the joints as a regular thing. It now prefers the heart—a fact that by no means renders it less serious. In like manner, we seldom meet plain pneumonia now, but rather broncho-pneumonia, whose character is even more grave. As for the grip, a rather mild affection by itself, it is now complicated with infections of all kinds which give it varied scope, very often serious, sometimes violent, as we saw during the epidemic of 1918-19, which had more than 30 millions of victims throughout the world.

"On the other hand, besides these maladies that are aggravated or transformed, there are many others that have grown feebler, such as chlorosis, exceptional today; gout, whose acute crises are replaced by a chronic development; diabetes, in which the very free glycosuria of yesterday is now rarely seen, and which develops with a slowness formerly unknown: tuberculosis, which tends toward the fibrous type, more easily curable; and finally variola, typhoid, diphtheria and scarlatina, whose ravages are now limited by our curative powers.

"To sum up, a considerable number of diseases are changing; some are incontestably more serious, but most are weakening, tending to threaten a less immediate danger, going through an evolution that is more easily controlled. This progressive attenuation is certainly not without influence on the prolongation of human life. Although in certain cases this is the fruit of progress in medical knowledge, in others it appears to result from the altered nature of the morbid conditions, to which man is reacting more and more by slow adaptation. There are microbes, such as those of putrefaction, that are no longer able to make us ill, because we have become used to them. Why should we not get accustomed to other disease germs? The attenuation that is manifested by certain infections is perhaps only the advance indication of an adaptation that will sooner or later protect man from all their attacks."

AN OBLIGING BEAUTY DOCTOR

A Beauty Specialist Gives Home-Made Recipe to Darken Gray Hair.

Mrs. M. D. Gillespie, a well-known beauty specialist of Kansas City, recently gave out the following statement regarding gray hair:

"Anyone can prepare a mixture at home that will darken gray hair, and make it glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and will not rub off."

How to Have Soft, Pretty White Hands

Many women will undoubtedly be glad to know how they may have beautiful, white, soft, pretty hands regardless of the work they have to do. The secret lies in rubbing a little Ice-Mint into the hands occasionally, preferably just before retiring at night. In the morning you will be agreeably surprised at the pleasant transformation that has been wrought by even a single application. Ice-Mint is made from a Japanese product that is simply marvelous for its beautifying properties, whether used on the hands or face. Regardless of what kind of work a woman does she should have pretty hands, as they are really the true mark of refinement. A few applications of Ice-Mint will actually make any woman proud of her hands and skin. It costs little and is sold and recommended by good druggists everywhere. Ice Mint Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

thing out of her except being called an old dear. But perhaps Lois, if handled very carefully, might throw a little light.

"I rather put my foot in it over Donnell that night he dined here," he began, regarding his plate with a less critical eye than usual. "I assumed that Vere was interested—in fact, more than interested."

"And I could have told you she wasn't, father." It was not often that Lois got a chance like this.

"Er—quite—I wish you had; however, there are no bones broken. But as to Vere, frankly, I'm not very happy."

"She doesn't seem so, either."

"You've noticed that, eh? Does it strike you that she is naturally—er—unaffected by men?"

"She doesn't seem to be," said Lois cautiously, "and it's certainly not for lack of opportunity."

"'Pon my soul, it doesn't seem normal. She's twenty-three."

"Last November."

"Well, whenever it was. What I'm wondering is whether she'll ever marry at all." The Colonel put this as lightly as he could, not in the least liking the sound of it.

"A man couldn't persuade her if she didn't want to."

"I'm inclined to agree. Yet the effect she seems to produce on men is—well——" He searched for the right word.

"Disastrous?" suggested Lois.

"I suppose you might call it that."

"Then what I want to know—" here the Colonel eyed his younger daughter fixedly and forgot all about diplomacy—"what I want to know is how this state of affairs is going to end?"

"Why don't you ask Vere?"

"I don't feel that the question would be very welcome."

"No, of course it wouldn't; but the fact remains that she could marry any one of a dozen men in a month, if she wanted to. And, father, please don't pump me about Vere. She's always been wonderful to me. And though perhaps I don't understand her completely, I do realize that she has only to crook a finger, and I'm left beating the air."

The Colonel sniffed. "Well, I don't know anything about that, but when I was a major one of my lieutenants was very like Vere in his attitude toward the other sex—very handsome—very attractive to women—but turned up his nose at them all. It wasn't till he got the devil of a bump that he came to his senses. They have five children now. I hope that won't happen to Vere."

Lois didn't answer. A bump! That set her brain working. Perhaps Vere had had one—and recently! Very recently! Here the heart of the sister of Vere quickened into a beat of healthy excitement. The man with whom she talked so long at Constant's—the man who had left England already. Had Vere met her Waterloo? She cuddled that thought for a moment, then hid it away cautiously in order that she might dissect it later.

What if it were true! It would make her more human and understandable. Up till now—here Lois' mind went back, picking out incident after incident with the unfaltering precision of youth—Vere had been a sort of passionless flame that ignited others without being consumed herself. But if this thing had really happened! Vere in love at last!

"I wouldn't say anything to her just now, father. There's nothing between her and Mr. Donnell—or anyone else that I know of. She'll probably surprise us before long. Really—I'd leave it."

The Colonel gave a little grunt. Practically impossible to get anything definite out of one's girls nowadays. They weren't what one could call disrespectful, but evidently thought it a mistake to admit their elders into confidence. But perhaps parents shouldn't expect that.

"Well," he conceded, "I don't want to upset her, but I've got her future at heart—and yours, too, Lois. I can't imagine her marrying what you could call the standard man. Got anything to say for yourself on that subject, eh?"

Lois shook her head. "Not yet."

"Well," said the Colonel, making what he considered a rather neat bouleversement, "I see that Crossbow won the Hunt Cup."

Lois looked very demure. "Yes, I saw it, and within the last few yards. Simply swept up and won by a head—a perfectly marvelous race. No one expected it."

"I should say not, at 33 to 1." The tone was a shade acid, because his bete noir, another retired Indian officer, had drawn Crossbow in the Club sweep, and won a matter of three hundred dollars. "Rather nice to have had something on at those odds, eh?"

Lois agreed that it would be exceedingly nice, and with a covert glance at her father wondered what would happen if he knew the rest. He'd explode—and the result would be appalling. Then she wondered whether Vere could really have done anything if Crossbow had not won.

"I think I'll go and see Vere now," she said.

She started upstairs, then, hesitating at Vere's door, turned back to her own room. So many things to think about—the load off her mind—the possibility of Vere being in love. What she really wanted to tell her sister was that she herself had been in love with Donnell for months, and it had nearly killed her when it came out that with him it was Vere all the time. And the fact that Vere didn't want him only made things worse.

Lois pictured herself Donnell's wife and was convinced that they would get on admirably, not expecting too much of each other and continuing much of the old-time freedom. She didn't want marriage to be too much of an effort, too burdened with reaching for unreachable ideals, and felt sure that Donnell thought the same. Of course there would be rows and difficulties, that was inevitable, but she would be able to do all she ever dreamed of doing.

Then Vere again. Vere had been upset since she heard about the debt—still more so since she dined with the Pollitts and met that man. There had been odd glances that Lois intercepted in which she seemed to be questioning herself as well as her sister. Usually one knew where she had been and what was done, but since then one only knew that she had seen Lockerby to no avail. What it amounted to was that a sort of curtain was drawn over these last few days, whereas formerly each of them knew everything about the other. And not going to Ascot was absurd. Perhaps the man!

"Thank Heaven," murmured Lois, "I don't take myself as seriously as she does; and though my looks aren't in it with hers, I get a lot more out of life. I don't believe I'll disturb her tonight."

CHAPTER VII.

THE long hours of night dragged out, and it seemed to Vere as she lay sleepless, and listening to the reiterant bells of London, that she was undergoing the pangs of a new birth. Life, as she had played it, was a satirical farce, and her belief in the justice of things was uprooted.

A thousand emotions, all futile, crowded upon her, and in the forefront was a blinding anger with Lois. Lois had been her undoing. It did not matter that the debt was about to be paid. The manner of its repayment only made the wound the deeper. She had loved Lois to her own destruction. And Lois, being of necessity kept ignorant of what had happened, would go her carefree way, smiling at her own escape.

It wasn't fair! It was a monstrous injustice. She yielded to a hot jealousy of Lois for having extricated herself from a wrong situation by a mad gamble. There was so much irony in this that Vere was shaken, her standards began to totter, and she questioned whether in the long run standards helped one to get any more out of life. In her case they had meant doing without things. Lois had gone the other way, and now—!

Passing from one mental revulsion to another, she presently reached a sort of dazed and weary calm in which she saw herself as never before. Not the cool, fair-minded, unpassionate and over-scrupulous girl, but another person altogether, who, carried away by an excess of devotion to her sister, had done an unforgivable thing. She could not escape the evidence. As between herself and Feverill, it had all been quite open and understood on both sides. But the unshakable fact became clear that it was her secret confidence in the effect she produced on men that had nerved her to make her extraordinary demand. And it had worked!

She struggled with this, but could not evade it. A thousand times she assured herself that she had made no physical appeal. A thousand times she reminded herself that Feverill had been entirely unmoved. The too familiar and possessive look had never been reflected in his gray eyes—never. But now, examining herself with a searchlight that spared nothing, she was forced to admit that had she been physically ordinary and perhaps unattractive this thing would never have come about.

This growing consciousness was harder to bear than all the rest of it. She had failed of her own standards. Feverill would not have yielded had she been "ordinary."

More than this. She realized while he talked to her that he, too, had been hit between the eyes. One could read it in his face, his manner and tone—the tone of a wounded man. For all his coolness and assurance, he was not normal that night. It was established when he said that he would never be brought back to England by what brought other men—a woman. She remembered this very distinctly, remembered the natural conclusion of the moment, and also that she had put it aside as being fortunate for her. Yet for the sake of a woman he could not yet know, and to whom he owed nothing, he had done the biggest thing in the world.

Vere winced at the thought, and saw herself a supplicant, devoid of modesty, pressing her own needs on a stranger. She had not had sufficient largeness of spirit to question what the granting of her petition—for it was nothing else—might mean to him. All she considered was her own need—her determination to save Lois at any cost. For that she wanted his name coupled with hers on a sheet of official paper! And she got it! Now it was no use arguing that she had done it for the sake of the one she loved best.

She fingered the letter addressed to Feverill's solicitors. Freedom lay here—when she desired it. But to avail herself of that letter would be to discard the man she had married when he had served his purpose. Her need was over, but she could not use this without exhibiting herself in a light that shocked her to imagine. It seemed now that in providing for her liberty when she chose to take it, Feverill had bound her with chains that, though invisible, were stronger than steel. Was it possible that he had foreseen all this? She was sure that he hadn't.

What sort of a man was the real Michael Feverill? Why could no woman bring him back? What had some woman done to him? Who were his people. What did he seek in Africa besides oblivion? How strange that she should not have discovered something of all this at the outset. How utterly unthinking of self he had been—while she thought of nothing else. Was she any better than that other and unknown woman—whatever she might have done?

Out of all this emerged one conception that slowly crystallized into a certainty. She could not undo anything—though it had seemed so simple a few hours ago—but it lay with her to let this man she had married know she was sorry. He must be made to know that. Also that she was half mad at the time. Also that for fear of inflicting further injustice she would make no further move till he knew and approved. She would beg him to put the kindest construction on her actions.

If he was ever to get this letter, it must be at once at the steamship's office in Algiers. She had no other possible address, and if the letter was to catch him there, it must go overland at once by Marseilles. "Michael Feverill, Esq., Passenger S. S. Orotava, Algiers. Urgent." Her first, perhaps, her only letter to her husband!

Then, while she was deliberating how to begin, his note was slipped under her door by Lois, who was thrilled by the sight of strange, blocky, masculine writing and a Southampton postmark.

"Letter for you, Vere. Feeling better?"

"Thanks, much better. I'll be down soon." She opened the envelope with a nervous quiver.

Dear Miss Craig:

With reference to our talk about your researches into the history of the old families of Dorset, I'm sorry I had so little time to be of assistance with regard to the Feverills. But if you go to my friend, Mr. J. L. Dartrey, 139 Queen Anne's Gate, and show him this note, he will be glad to tell you all he knows about my very humble self and our side of the line—which is a great deal more than I know. It's rather a specialty of his. As I won't be in England again, please accept my best wishes for the success of your present undertaking. You are very welcome to anything in which I may have been able to help.

Yours sincerely,
Michael Feverill.

She read this very swiftly, then again, word by word, missing nothing of its camouflage. Why had he sent it? Had he also written to Dartrey? Old families of Dorset! She had to smile at that. Perhaps he wanted her to be in a position to make sure she hadn't married a waster.

Or was there some other design behind it? If so, what could be its purpose, since he was never to be in England again? What a queer man! But, anyway, here was her chance to let him know that she was sorry. That was something. And she would certainly go to see Dartrey. To him she was Miss Craig! An authoress! How cleverly it had been done.

Then there would be Lockerby. To Lockerby she would be Miss Craig only for a moment. She pictured his face when he heard—and what he would think. That didn't matter. But what would she do with the money?

She dressed, feeling strangely encouraged because Feverill had sent her no word of resentment or even regret. And he was thoughtful—which made her the more determined to be entirely honest when she wrote to him. He must start into the unknown not the more bitter because of her. This secret shame of herself, this readiness to shoulder the blame, invested her with an unusual gentleness and appeal of manner and expression, so that when she went downstairs, Lois, remarking an odd tenderness in her sister's face, concluded that she had indeed been hard hit. She looked as though she needed sympathy. How strange—for Vere!

Would you have dared to wash this shawl? Its designer had no fears!

This brilliant evening shawl was designed and painted in Samuel Russel's Studio of Modern Art, New York, where you may see a rich profusion of scarves, lounging pajamas, parasols for Biarritz and Palm Beach, costumes for musical comedies and moving pictures.

"Every garment, before it leaves the studio, is given a soap bath in suds from Ivory Flakes," says Mr. Russel. "I have found Ivory the most satisfactory cleansing material."

But this is New York. Would you find the same advice in Chicago? In San Francisco?

From the salespeople in the smartest shops everywhere

East and West, North and South—in the smartest shops of 23 leading cities, when salespeople were recently asked to recommend a soap for fine silks and woolens, they unhesitatingly said—"Ivory".

For a gaily embroidered French frock in Philadelphia, for soft English sportwear in Chicago, for new printed silks in San Francisco, for all kinds of lovely things in the finest shops all over the country, salespeople advised: "Cleanse them with Ivory."

There might be a question about the safety of other soaps, but never about the safety of Ivory. As the salespeople themselves say, "You use Ivory on your face, so you know it is safe for fine things."

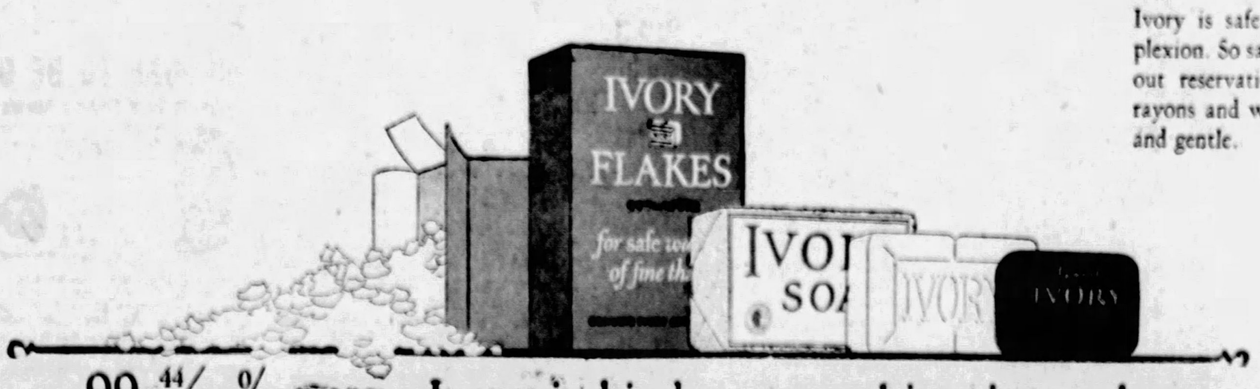
Ivory has guarded lovely complexions for nearly half a century . . . Is there any other soap recommended for delicate garments which you would think of using on your face? Ivory you know is pure and mild. Naturally anything which is safe in clear water is extra-safe in its care.

Would you like a little book giving specific directions on how to wash your finest things? If you will ask us on a post card for the booklet, Thistledown Treasures—their selection and care, it will come to you quickly, without charge. Address Winifred S. Carter, Dept. 56-B-12, Box 1801, Cincinnati, Ohio.

PROCTER & GAMBLE

Ivory is safe for the most delicate complexion. So salespeople recommend it without reservation for the finest silks and rayons and woolens—they know it is pure and gentle.

Gentle, safe suds from Ivory—cake or flakes. Ivory Flakes are pure Ivory Soap flaked to tissue fineness for instant suds. Safe for anything that is safe in pure water alone.



99 44/100 % pure · Ivory is kind to everything it touches

This is the Eveready Layerbilt, the unique "B" battery that contains no waste spaces or materials between the cells; the longest lasting of all Eveready.

The Eveready Layerbilt lasts longest because it alone contains modern flat cells

ONLY the Eveready Layerbilt "B" Battery No. 486 contains modern, up-to-the-minute flat cells, the most efficient shape for the cells in a "B" battery. A given amount of active chemicals will last longer when in the flat shape, than when packed in cylindrical cells. Until this remarkably long-lived battery was invented, all dry cell "B" batteries were assembled of cylindrical cells, each cell one and a half volts. Fifteen of these cells, connected in series, form a 22½-volt battery. Thirty of them make a 45-volt battery.

Such batteries have a lot of waste space between the cylindrical cells, waste space usually filled with pitch to prevent the cells from moving about and breakage of the wires running from cell to cell. We have corrected this state of affairs. We developed and perfected flat cells that can be packed tightly together under pressure, with no waste spaces between them. That is the way the patented Eveready Layerbilt is built. Only Eveready can make it.

Its flat cells are more efficient than cylindrical ones. That makes the Eveready Layerbilt last longer than any other Eveready. It is a modern, economical, convenient, highly efficient battery for modern receivers. Provides Battery Power, pure Direct Current, silent, hum-free, uniform, reliable. Be sure you get the Eveready Layerbilt.

Why You Catch Colds and How To Avoid Them

THE complaint is often heard that medical science has never done much to cure that most common of all diseases, the common cold. While this may be true enough, science has at least shown us how we catch cold, how to avoid this annoying and sometimes dangerous nuisance, and that a cold is always somebody's fault. It is not necessary to have colds.

New and interesting facts of this and other matters affecting our daily health are set forth in "Health and Environment," a book by Drs. Leonard Hill and Argyll Campbell, two well-known English medical researchers, and just published in London.

The most important thing about colds is that we never catch them at the time we think we do. We sit down at our desk feeling all right until someone opens a window and lets a draft sweep across our back or ankles. The first thing we know we have a fit of sneezing, our nose runs, our eyes become inflamed, and we slam that window. But we keep on shivering no matter how warm it is and go home with a chill, followed by a fever, to be laid up for days with bronchitis or grippe.

We have a cold, all right. There is no doubt about that, and most of us would stake our lives that we get it from that open window. But science says we are all wrong about that. We caught the cold two or three days before from Mr. I Should Worry, who coughed just behind us in the theatre, church or into our face in the crowded street car. His ignorance or indifference sprayed the air around us with the microbes of his cold and we breathed them in. We have forgotten about him, but our nose knows.

In our nostrils, throat or bronchial tubes his germs had multiplied, pouring their poisons in steadily mounting quantities into the blood until the point was reached when the whole balance of the system was upset. One of the commonest symptoms when microbial toxins are poisoning the body is an upsetting of the heat-controlling apparatus.

At the moment we sat down at the desk the toxins had risen to a critical point and we were due to get some bad news from some part of our body. It might come in the form of indigestion, dry throat or a headache. But in Winter some change of temperature which ordinarily we could not notice would be pretty certain to start our disordered heat-regulating machinery to acting up. The draft from the window started it, but, then, so might a glass of ice water, a cup of hot tea or a bit of vigorous exercise.

It must not be supposed from this that one can expose himself to drafts and cold weather with impunity. Over-exposure weakens the system and leaves it wide open to attacks, not only of the cold microbe, but many others. One does not need to go into a crowded hall to be infected with a cold. You can get the germ right in the fresh air of the city streets most any Winter's day, especially if there is a wind.

There have been many campaigns against spitting on the sidewalk, but nothing has been done against the far more dangerous practice of blowing the nose into the air instead of into a handkerchief. The person who expectorates may or may not have an infection, but the man who goes to the trouble of blowing his nose does so because his nose is running, which usually means that it is infected. By blowing it into the air the man—for it is always a man; no woman ever does such a thing—creates a spray of fine droplets of mucus filled with his microbes. On a windy day the infected spray can be carried to your nostrils a whole block away or wafted in a bedroom window. A few days later you won't know whom to thank for your cold.

During the influenza epidemic people were taught to be careful about sneezing. We could make colds rare and unimportant by teaching those who have them that they are not expected to spread them. Colds can be caught in the Summer, but they are not as common, because crowds do not get together in rooms with doors and windows closed, exchanging each other's microbes.

Around the poles the climate is too cold for the cold germs to thrive. Shackleton, in his Antaretic expedition, reported one solitary outbreak of colds, just after the opening of a bale of clothing packed in London. The Eskimo, who lives all Winter in the most poorly ventilated of houses, the igloo, and when he goes out faces frightful exposure, has no words in his language to express "catching a cold." In his country it can't be done. When the Eskimo is brought to civilized lands where he can be nice and warm he suffers one cold after another until pneumonia or tuberculosis finishes him off. His system is virgin soil for cold microbes and he has never learned to build up the white man's resistance to them.

Another kind of "cold" that is not a true cold at all is of the hay fever variety, which is only an irritation of the mucous membrane caused by pollen of certain grasses and other plants and various kinds of dust. President Coolidge was bothered by a succession of "colds" in spite of every precaution, until the doctors found that dandruff from horses caused the trouble. Some people get "hay fever" from face powders and strong perfumes, long-haired dogs, and even fresh paint. For others a visit to a cotton mill will bring a type of "cold" known as "mill fever." These are not real colds, but an irritation of the nasal membranes by the dust which makes them behave just as they do when irritated by the cold microbe.

The membranes are quite able to take care of an occasional microbe when they are in proper condition. When right they are firm and moist, with a secretion that discourages the growth of any sort of germ. But when the nasal passages are dry or swollen, germs can multiply and work their way into the tissues, and the result is the infection we call a cold.

The chief cause for dry or swollen membranes is bad ventilation, which does not mean necessarily bad air, but stagnant and too hot, dry or moist. Even if the atmosphere is pure and germ free, it will disturb the membranes of the nasal passage if dry and much over 70 degrees Fahrenheit. Winter air, however, is very dry when heated, which increases the amount of evaporation from the skin and makes us feel quite cool at even higher temperatures. As most meeting places are heated with a view of making comfortable the women in their modern, not very substantial garments, churches and theatres more often than not start around 68 and then, with the aid of the animal heat of the people, quickly run up to 80 or over.

This is further aggravated if, as is the case in most large rooms, there is a carpet of cold air drifting along the floor, keeping our feet cold while our heads are hot. All rooms are heated wrong from the scientific point of view. Our heads are in the tropics while our feet are in the arctic, which is the reverse of what nature wants. Whether it is by radiator, register, stove or gas heater, the effect is the same—to heat the room from the ceiling down. Long before any of this heat has reached as low as our feet it is unbearable to our flushed faces.

Strangely enough, the ancient Romans installed the ideal system in their villas. The heat, smoke and all, was carried from the furnaces through broad flat flues, which wandered about in the floors, keeping warm the Romans' stockingless, sandalled feet, but not sending much heat up around their heads. How it worked and why this ideal scheme went out of style we do not know, but it looks from here as if those old fellows had a high respect for their Roman noses.

Cold feet alone do not cause nasal congestion if the head is cooled equally, as is the normal case outdoors. Cool baths, especially in salt water, seem to convey a certain immunity to colds, and from this it was reasoned that one could be toughened to cold. In the resulting fad, even little babies were exposed to raw and windy weather, their little faces blue with the cold. We don't hear so much of that fad these days, but it did harden a lot of children—those that lived.

The discovery that workers in chlorine-gas factories during the war were immune to influenza and colds is believed to be due to a mild stimulation by the gas of the mucous membranes, causing a steady, copious flow of secretions which washed away the microbes before they had time to settle. Fumes of sulphurous acid, nitric acid and nitrogen peroxide had the same favorable effect, but phosgen was the reverse.

Coal dust excites secretions of mucus, and as a result coal miners are singularly free from colds and tuberculosis of the lungs, but those who inhale silica dust, which is inert, are abnormally subject to these ailments. The use of bismuth sub-nitrate as a snuff stopped an epidemic of grippy colds in an English school, and habitual smokers are found to have fewer colds than others. However, when a cigarette smoker gets a cold on his lungs it is likely to be serious.

The body of an individual who has hardened himself to withstand exposure to cold does it in two ways. He burns up more fuel in the way of food, and thus keeps himself warm on the principle of opening the drafts of a stove. It is good to be able to do this in an emergency, but he who makes a regular practice of it is throwing an unnecessary strain on his digestive organs and burning himself out before his time. A virtuous but senseless kind of dissipation.

Another way nature protects such a person from the cold is by clothing him with fat. The fat little Eskimo is an example of these underskin clothes, and he needs them. Women who wish to keep a slim figure should remember that if they do not dress warmly enough in cold weather nature is likely to put some clothes on them in a way they won't like. Fat has its well-known disadvantages, and for the civilized man it is better to wear plenty of clothes and burn coal rather than try to be tough as a savage.

A person who has fallen into water and must walk a long distance in wet clothes and a freezing wind can do so with surprising little danger if he can wear over his wet garments a waterproof. This, of course, keeps out the wind, but the most important thing it does is to prevent the wet clothes from drying.

One might at first think that drying his clothes was just what he needs, but it is not; it would be fatal. It is the evaporation of the water in clothes that are wet that makes them cold and dangerous. If it were not for evaporation wet clothes would be just as warm as dry. Shackleton remarks how often he and his men were wet through and at night crept into damp and even wet sleeping bags. Lying on the snow they withstood blizzards that way and nobody caugth cold. The reason was that they did not dry out.

Birds in a cold wind face the blasts which lay every feather flat, giving a windproof covering to the down beneath. In sultry weather they turn around and ruff up, letting in the air. Cloth dyed black is warmest, because it absorbs most of the sun's rays; next to that is yellow; then red, light blue and, coolest of all, white. This can be proved by laying strips of the different colors on the snow in the sun. The black will sink the furthest and white will not sink into the snow at all.

The body regulates its temperature partly by the amount of food it burns up and partly by the amount of water it evaporates from the skin and lungs. If we exercise violently on a hot day we force Nature to burn up more instead of less, so she has to make up for it by pouring out water in the form of sweat, soaking our clothes and keeping us as near as possible in the condition of the man who fell in with his clothes on. If we try to work in the heat with a waterproof on we will quickly learn something about how warm wet clothes can be when the water is not allowed to evaporate.

Of course, all this sweating makes us very thirsty and we drink lots of water, happy in the belief that the more pure water we drink, the better for us. However, we can have too much of any good thing, including water. The drinking of much water to make up for great losses by sweating impoverishes the body of sodium and potassium salts and thus produces cramps.

In cases of heat stroke the natural sweating stops and the recognized treatment is artificial sweating. Water is poured on the body of the patient and he is fanned vigorously. In this way it is possible to draw out of him prodigious amounts of heat.

Contrary to common belief, small rooms naturally ventilate better than large ones. Experience in temporary office buildings during the war in hot weather showed that girls were far less liable to faint in rooms 80 by 20 than in rooms 80 by 70. The wall, window and door ventilation is more efficient in the smaller ones. Also high ceilings are a disadvantage in both hot and cold weather.

Three Days of Terror

were in waiting to receive them and to attend to their wants. Offers of hot food and of wine were declined by the ladies, who expressed a wish to retire to their staterooms. Graham, having assured himself that they were in safe hands and wanted for nothing, bade them farewell for the time, and accepted Captain Popinot's invitation to drink a little whiskey and soda and smoke a cigar in the latter's cabin. Thus engaged, he complimented the captain on the beauty of the yacht, and at the same time remarked how strange it was that he had never seen her before in any of those English ports where steam yachts are usually to be found at certain seasons of the year.

"No, sir," replied Captain Popinot. "There is no wonder in that. L'Hirondelle has never entered English waters, or, at any rate, those waters which lie in close proximity to the English coast, until a few days ago, when she brought my master to London. I have had the great honor of commanding her ever since she was built years ago, and during that time we have made three separate voyages round the world. She is, indeed, a magnificent vessel in every way, and I believe it no secret that her owner spent the sum of seventy millions of francs in building, fitting and furnishing her. It is impossible to believe, sir, how beautifully she behaves even in the roughest weather, until you have had experience of her seagoing qualities. On more than one occasion it has been my good fortune to make a practical test of her powers of endurance, and I can honestly affirm that there is no vessel of her tonnage in the world which can do what she can. I remember, sir——"

Here the worthy captain wandered away into the meadows of reminiscence, wherein he proceeded to pluck so many flowers that Graham, who was already weary and exhausted of brain, gradually lost him and only found him again on waking with a sudden start to a discovery of the fact that he had been asleep. He apologized profoundly to the captain for this breach of good manners, and requested permission to retire for what remained of the night.

"Sir," said Captain Popinot, "if I were you I would sleep long in the morning. Everything that you desire will be performed, and you may breakfast at whatever hour you please. You will perceive from the extremely slight motion of the vessel that our voyage has already commenced and that we are progressing at a fair speed. When we have once passed the Nore we shall go full speed ahead, which, in our case, let me tell you, sir, means twenty-four knots an hour."

Having mentioned this fact with great pride Captain Popinot shook hands with his guest and went on deck, while Graham repaired to his cabin, an extremely convenient apartment in which were a bedroom, a dressing room, a bath room, and a parlor. He immediately retired to bed, and after reflecting a few moments upon the strange events of the past thirty-six hours, fell asleep, and was fortunately too much exhausted to dream.

CHAPTER XV.

An Island in the Sea.

IN unconscious accordance with Captain Popinot's desire, Graham slumbered so soundly in his luxurious bed that the sun had already passed the meridian when he opened his eyes for the first time since closing them on his retirement. At first astonished by his unfamiliar surroundings, he gradually remembered all that had happened during the previous day, and reflecting that his charges might already have appeared in the saloon and be in need of his services, he made haste to perform his toilet and to join them there. Immediately upon rising from his bed, he was waited upon by an obsequious valet who performed his duties with rare skill and celerity and with a noiseless ease which proved extremely gratifying to the senses. So deft in his movements, and so thoroughly versed in all the mysteries of his art was this person, that Graham found it quite unnecessary to ask a question or issue an order. But Graham, watching the man covertly, made a startling discovery—the valet was deaf and dumb. This discovery made him reflect upon the mystery which appeared to circle round de Reineville's doings. Although it was not yet forty-eight hours since he had first met that strange personage, Graham felt that in him he had encountered the most remarkable man whom he had yet known.

Upon entering the saloon Graham found that Evelyn and Cynthia had only just risen. Eight hours of sound and dreamless sleep had restored the bloom to their cheeks and to one of them, at least, her wonted animation. Miss Beachcroft, indeed, was lavish in her praise of the arrangements which de Reineville had made for their comfort.

"If it were not for the circumstances under which we were bundled out of London," she said, "one might feel all this to be extremely delightful. This is, without exception, the most gorgeous floating palace I ever set foot on. Why, it's much more comfortable and better appointed than the Emperor of Franconia is! My cabin, or berth, or whatever you call it, was quite oppressively grand. I tell you what, though, I had something of a shock. Do you know, that maid who was told off to attend me is deaf and dumb?"

Evelyn uttered a sudden exclamation.

"And so was my maid!" she said. "How very strange!"

"As to that," said Graham, "I'm afraid it isn't. The man who discharged the duties of valet for me was also deaf and dumb. It appears to me that M. de Reineville cherishes some penchant for deaf-mutes."

"He perhaps finds it advisable to have them about him," remarked Cynthia. "However, all this is very nice, and I'm fearfully hungry—it's one o'clock."

At that moment the door of a small salle a manger was noiselessly drawn back and a solemn butler bowed himself to the carpet in token that breakfast awaited the travelers. The meal which followed was delightful in every respect. The cooking was perfection; the fruit such as could not have been obtained in London under fabulous prices; the butler and his two satellites anticipated every wish and moved literally in velvet slippers. Graham formed the notion that they, too, were deaf and dumb, but they were so highly trained in the performance of their duties that there was never any need to address them, and he contented himself for the time by speculating upon de Reineville's extraordinary arrangements.

Who's Who in Waterless Cookers

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

"BUT how can you possibly cook without water?" inquired an interested woman friend, when I was trying to explain to her the principle of operation of my waterless cooker. That does seem difficult, or impossible, until one really studies the nature of foods. Is it not true that a large proportion of countless foods is made up of moisture? And such products as the leafy vegetables, fruits, and even meats and fish, contain large percentages of water. Spinach, for example, is 92 per cent of pure water. Potatoes are 78 per cent of water. Apples contain 84 per cent, while beef contains 58 per cent of water.

If we keep this in mind, it is not so difficult to see how we can cook many products without immersing them in a quantity of water, as is the usual "open kettle" method. Suppose we could cook foods in their own water, or moistures? And that is exactly what can be done if we use any form of utensil patterned after the idea of a waterless cooker. If we can place the food in a pot which will not scorch or which will prevent too rapid evaporation of water, then little additional moisture will need to be added.

The best type of waterless cooker is made of aluminum and has an insulated or "false bottom." This construction may be asbestos held between the real bottom of cast iron, and the upper or "false bottom," of aluminum. The object of this second bottom to the pot is to prevent the intense heat from affecting the food, and of lessening the evaporation. In addition, the typical waterless cooker always has a tight-fitting lid. This is to keep the steam generated in cooking in the pot, instead of allowing it to escape into the kitchen. Who has not noticed the jet of escaping steam over a pot of boiling potatoes? Yet, if this same amount of steam were retained in the pot, naturally less water would be required in the first place.

This is exactly what waterless cooking aims to do: it keeps the natural liquid of the food in the utensil and prevents over-rapid cooking, because of the false bottom in the pot. Thus during the process the steam which arises strikes the lid of the cooker and falls back onto the food beneath. It again rises, falls, and so on, making a perfect circulation of moisture. This can easily be compared to the "percolation" of a coffee pot, where the water and steam continually rise, fall, and thus cook the product. In short, foods prepared by the waterless cooker method are percolated in their own moisture.

What are the advantages of this type of cooking? Surely, it is quite plain that with less moisture lost into the room there is also less flavor lost, and also less food value lost. That is, the waterless cooked food is richer in flavor, richer in nourishment, and quite probably richer in the vitamines which it originally possessed. These, of course, are marked advantages, because, after all, what we want is flavorful food, nourishing food and food which retains as much as possible of its chemical value.

To be more practical, the waterless cooker makes an easier time for the housewife. Instead of having to spend hours of pot watching, she can go about her other affairs, sure that the roast, or the carrots, or the apples will not dry up and wither while she is away. Strangely enough but quite true, waterless foods gain in bulk, instead of shrinking, as they do in most cooking methods. It has been proved that a pot roast which would ordinarily shrink 10 ounces under usual processes, will weigh an ounce or two more when prepared the waterless way. Here again the moisture swells the tissues instead of being extracted and leaving them dry and, too often, quite tasteless.

For cooking vegetables, in particular, the waterless cooker is the equivalent of a pressure cooker, at the same time being considerably easier to handle. All authorities are in agreement that steam-cooked food is the most retentive of flavor, with less loss in mineral salts. But the average housewife finds the handling of a pressure cooker perhaps a little frightening, or at least a little complicated. On the other hand, the waterless cooker is nothing but an ordinary pot with a thicker bottom and clamps to hold the lid on. Thus, it is as easy to use as any ordinary kitchen utensil.

When foods are not very juicy, as small an amount as one cup of water may be put in the cooker first, and then the food added. It is always best to heat the utensil thoroughly first, as this starts as soon as possible the extraction from the food of its own moisture.

Another point: waterless cookers must always be employed on a low flame. This gives a great saving in gas, but, even more important, insures that we have steamed food, and not fried food. Nothing is so thoroughly wrong as to cook delicate vegetables, for example, at such a high temperature that they may literally be said to be "fried." Gentle simmering and slow breaking down of the food fibres insures richer flavor and more even cooking.

For all these reasons, any housewife who does not know these advantages might do well to investigate the waterless cooker of which there are many makes on the market. This time of the year, when one is cooking pot roasts and heavy meats, puddings, and the more hearty dishes, is just the occasion to let the waterless cooker save gas, cooking supervision and food value.

"He's a loss, I mean he *act*ually is!"

"HANDSOME? My dear, you've no idea! But I ask you, how can this Brummel person expect me to travel with him? I'm totally afraid when he removes his gloves. I really am. I mean you'd think he never cut his nails."

Tested Economical Recipes

By Mary Lee Swann,
The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

Butternut Salad.

MIX 1½ cups cold diced potato with ½ cup diced heart celery and ¾ pound blanched and sliced butternuts. Serve on heart lettuce with French dressing. Garnish with strips of pimiento.

Moravian Cookies.

WASH and cream 1 pound butter. Add 3 cups granulated sugar and beat until smooth. Beat in 5 eggs. Add 1 cup cream and a few drops vanilla and 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in 1 tablespoon hot water. Add enough sifted flour to make a stiff dough. Chill thoroughly, roll very thin and cut out with fancy cutters. Bake until delicately colored.

Maple Sugar Bonbons.

MIX 3½ pounds maple sugar with ½ teaspoon salt and 1 quart cream. Cook rapidly until sugar thermometer registers 238 degrees. Pour out on a cold, damp marble slab or large platter, and stir to a cream with a spatula. When smooth press into a buttered pan and cut into small squares.

Quick Hollandaise Sauce.

HEAT ¾ cup water, the juice of 1 lemon and ¾ teaspoon salt in double boiler. Add 1 tablespoon cornstarch blended in 2 tablespoons cold water. Stir constantly until smooth and creamy. Remove from stove and pour on 2 beaten egg yolks. Add 2 tablespoons butter and reheat over hot water. Will not curdle.

Chocolate Cake.

CREAM ¼ pound butter. Add 1½ cups sugar and beat smooth and add 2 well-beaten eggs. Mix and sift 2 cups flour, 1 teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon soda. Add alternately to first mixture with ⅔ cup sour milk and ⅓ cup sweet milk. When well blended add 2 squares chocolate melted over hot water and ¼ teaspoon vanilla. Bake in two buttered layer cake pans. Put together and cover with white or chocolate icing.

Luncheon Fish.

STEAM a large fish. Remove all bones and skin. To 1 quart of the flaked fish add salt and pepper to taste and about 1 teaspoon onion juice. Melt 1 tablespoon butter, add 1 tablespoon flour and blend well. Add 1 cup cream and stir constantly until smooth and creamy. Remove from fire and beat in 4 beaten eggs. Butter a ring mold, put in the mixture, pressing gently to remove all air bubbles. Cover with buttered paper and place in a pan of warm water. Bake in a moderate oven about ½ hour, taking care that the water surrounding the mold does not boil. Turn out on a platter, fill the centre with boiled potato balls and sprinkle with finely-chopped parsley. Serve with Hollandaise sauce.
